THE RAILROAD FREIGHT BRAKEMAN.

PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL REQUEST.

Dust-grimed features, weather-beaten. Hands that show the scars of toil; Do you envy him his station, Patient tiller of the soil? In the storm or in the sunshine. He must mount the speeding train, Ride outside at post of duty, Heeding not the drenching rain.

In the pleasant summer weather, Standing on the car-top high, He can view the changing landscape As he rushes swiftly by.
While he notes the beauteous picture, Which the lovely landscape makes, Suddenly across his dreaming Comes the quick, shrill call for brakes.

But when Winter's icy fingers Cover earth with snowy shroud, And the North-wind like a madman, Rushes on with shrickings loud— Then behold the gallant brakemen Spring to heed the engine's oall; Running o'er the loy car-tops— God protect him if he fall!

Do not scorn to greet him kindly, He will give you smile for smile; Though he's nothing but a brakeman, Do not deem him surely vile. Speake to him in kindly language, Though his clothes are coarse and plain In his fearless bosom beateth Heart that feels both joy and pain. He may have a widowed mother;

He may be her only joy; Mayhap in her home she praying For the safety of her boy. How he loves that dear old mother, Toiling for her day by day, Always bringing her some present Every time he draws his pay.

Daily facing death and danger, One misstep or slip of hand Sends the poor, unlucky brakeman To the dread and unknown land. When we soan our evening paper, Note what its filled columns says, One brief line attracts our notice, "One more brakeman killed to-day!"

In her little lonely cottage, Waiting in the waning light, Sits the luckless brakeman's mother; She expects her boy to-night. Some one brings the fatal message—
"God have mercy!" hear her pray,
As she reads the fearful story;
"Killed while coupling cars to-day!"

"PUT ON" HIS LAST BRAKE. Another Chapter Added to the Sad History of "Only a Brakeman."

Joe Barnes was about four weeks in the employ of the Midland Railway as brakeman. He was a thorough railroad man and had, we are informed, been conductor on two roads; he had been on the Credit Valley, Grand Trunk, Northern, Canada Southern and a railroad in the South. In the performance of his duties he was active and intelligent, and with his companions was sociable and jolly. On Saturday evening at the Summit he lost his life, and in a terrible manner. While jumping down between the box car and the van with one hand on each, it is supposed he slipped and fell between the two cars. The train was going very slowly and he had almost cleared himself but-too late: the wheel turned slowly over his neck and severed his head from his body. Life was extinguished in an instant. His body was placed in the van and brought to Port Hope, where-cold in death-it was viewed by many of our citizens, who shuddered as they gazed.

The deceased was 22 years old, and boarded with his sister, Mrs. Wilkinson, whose husband is an employee in the Midland shops. He has also another sister in Port Hope, and a father and two brothers living elsewhere. The funeral was delayed until Tuesday in order that the latter might attend. A great number of deaths have occurred on the Midland in a manner similar to the above. recently, and the lesson of the perilous life of a brakeman is being taught with convincing always taken an active part, being years ago a member of Hope council, and of late years his name had frequently been brought forward as a candidate for legislative honors. In politics he was a Reformer, with very decided views. His religious as well as his political sympathies were strongly marked. In former years he took active part as a Bible Christian local preacher. His funeral on Sunday was very largely attended, notwithstanding his unlooked for demise and the limited time for circulating the news.

Mrs. Lovekin, of Newcastle; Mrs Beaman, of Clarke; Mr. Robert Bedford, of Hope; and Dr. Bedford, of Manitoba, are the family who mourn his loss.

POLICE COURT.

The case in which Rankin and AsViewed from the Standpoint Peterson are concerned turns out to be a Serious One.

THEY GET OFF EASY.

The trial of those concerned in the Sunday fracas narrated in last issue was proceeded with according to postponement. Peterson was still considered to be in too precarious a condition to be brought into Court, and so the evidence of one witness only was taken. Mr. S. Smith appeared for the prosecution and Mr. D. Chisholm for the defence.

Mr. F. Hobbs was the witness examined. He stated that he was coming from the railway shops on the Sunday in ,question about five o'clock, and met Rankin with a friend named Moore. He shook hands with him and talked a little while and then started home. The witness lived not far from Peterson's house and was called over by a crowd there to gave them some music. He went over, played "Home, Sweet Home for them," and ever, thing seemed jolly and good natured. Presently Rankin was called in, Peterson meeting him and shaking hands. Some little altercation took place but not much, and witness excused himself and went home, remarking when he got home that there was likely to be a row over there before night. Before he had got nicely seated, he heard a noise and when he looked saw Peterson putting young Lee out of the gate, and heard him use some pretty loud talk to the others to get out also. Lee as soon as he got out of the gate began to throw stones at Peterson and the house, a number of the stones breaking dishes, etc. Peterson then went into the house and brought out a gun, threatening to shoot "the — if they did not get out"; he levelled the gun, but to the best of his knowledge there was no cap on the nipple. Rankin clinched Peterson and the two tussled over the gun, inside of the house. Witness and Wm. Ross held them while Lee pulled away the gun from them and give it to Mrs. Peterson. The com-batants then separated and Peterson walked away into the lot adjoining the one he lives on. Rankin in the meantime began throwing stones at the house, and Mrs. Peterson begged of him "for God's sake" not to throw stones and break all her furniture, as Peterson was not in the house. Witness next saw Peterson coming back with what he thought was a sling-shot—he would not swear it was a sling-shot-and stand in front of his house, swearing and shouting at them all the time to get out of his house or he would murder them. Rankin, as Peterson came round, was standing with a stone in each hand, and he threw one of them, (about the size of his two fists) and struck Peterson above the left eye, hitting him a terrible blow. He also threw another but it did not strike Peterson, who did not appear to feel the effect of the first, and made a rush for Rankin, both clinching. Peterson used his sling-shot three times striking Rankin a heavy blow on the side of the head at least once. Then he (Peterson) seemed to sink down as though from the effects of the wound in his head, and Rankin stood over him with a heavy stone weighing about 14 lbs., threatening to kill "the d-d-Mrs. Peterson interfered and Rankin said it it was not for her he would murder the ----The witness said that after the gun was taken from Peterson he drew a large jackknife but did not attempt to stab anyone. Witness did not hear him threaten to stab Rankin to the heart. He took the knife away from Peterson, drawing the blade through his hand, and was under the impression that Peterson's hand was cut. Several interfered when Rankin stood over Peterson with the stone, and he (Rankin) did not throw the stone. The row then ceased. Both were covered with blood. Those present were Wm. Ross, Rankin, Hambly, Lee and Peterson. They were all under the influence of liquor Ross and Hambly were the only two that were anyway sober. Peterson was acting in self-defence; witness thought that the others were the attacking parties. Lee seemed to be the chief agitator and if it had not been for some vulgar language to Mrs. Peterson, before the row started but Peterson did not hear it. At this stage, court was adjourned until three o'clock in the afternoon. The plea of "not guilty" entered by Peterson's solicitor was withdrawn. The charge preferred by Rankin against Peterson was withdrawn also, and the solicitors on both sides asked His Worship to consider the circumstances and be lenient as possible. No more witnesses were examined and His Worship gave judgemnt. He said that had Peterson been sober his actions considered as in self-defence could not be justified in taking the violent measures he did. Of the two, he considered Rankin the more guilty, as the latter had nothing to incite him against his opponent. The conduct of the third party, Lee, who was commented upon severely, could not excuse Rankin in any sense. Had he quit in time the trouble would all have been avoided. As to the suffering of these men, which he was asked to take into consideration, he did not think he had anything to do with that, because they brought it on themselves. Besides, he must consider the general public, who, he felt, were strongly opposed to such Sunday sprees. It was a ost inappropriate day to chose for such jollifications. The fine imposed upon Peterson was $4 and $3 costs, or 10 days in goal; Rankin, $10 fine and $5.20 costs, or 21 days in goal. There were two cases of "drunk and disorderly," one of the accused being only 16 years old. They were both up for first offenses and were consequently let off easy. However, the youngest seemed to be in a mood to laugh over the way he slipped out. Worship called him back letting him know that it was "no laughing matter" by fining him $4 or immediate locking up. The boy begged off and cried, but justice ever unrelenting showed no mercy.

and telling the crowd to leave. Rankin used

IRELAND

of a Canadian Delegate to the Triennial Council of Orangemen.

A PLEASANT HALF-HOUR'S C'AT WITH MR. DAVID MARSHALL ON HIS RETURN.

Our representative knowing the general interest taken in Irish affairs-the land, notwithstanding all its faults, which so many in Canada feel proud to call their native land -and, especially, the interest which so many of Mr. Marshall's friends would take in his opinion of the course events, political and social, are taking in the Emerald Isle, called on him and had a very interesting chat indeed. So interesting that he thinks THE TIMES readers should have the benefit

"Well, Mr. Marshall, how did you enjoy your trip?" was the first question. " I had

A SPLENDID TIME -a very pleasant time, especially in Ireland. I landed at Newry and from there went to Belfast, the most flourishing of all the towns in Ireland. Old Derry, Enniskillen, Dublin and a host of other places of interest to Irishmen were included in my wanderings. I also spent seven days in London, where the Triennial Council was in session; and I tell you I did not lose any time in viewing the sights. I dropped into the House of Commons, and the House of Lords while in session, and visited Westminster Abbey and as many other places of historic note as was possible during my stay.

OUR OWN HOUSE OF COMMONS compares very favorably with that of Britain; in fact, in appearance and convenience it surpasses it. In the British House, there are no desks or stands of any kind for ink or paper. The members sit in low cushioned seats or sofas.

What about Home Rule? What were your impressions regarding this question, and what the general feeling? The fact of the matter is: Home Rule in Ireland is an impossibility; it is absurd to think of it. What the Land League really want is SEPARATION from Great Britain. They pretend to ask for a provincial legislative body similar to that in Canada, in order that they may have the right to direct local affairs. It would be absurd to grand Ireland Home Rule and give them, besides, a voice through the general Parliament in ruling the local affairs of England, Scotland and Wales, while these latter have neither Home Rule or a say in Irish affairs. If England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales were asking local parliaments with a federal legislative body at the head, the same as it is in Canada, then there would be some sense in agitating Home Rule for Ireland. Let these agitators, instead of inciting the people to rebellion and crime, make an effort to bring about an understanding with the other parts of the Kingdom. Until all are placed on the same footing it is useless to keep up what can only be a fruitless agita-

-What is the general feeling of the Protestants on this question? Home Rule means to them

SIMPLY ROME RULE. They regard the movement with utter abhorrence. Everywhere they are in opposition to it, and strongly loyal to Great Britain. "Do you consider it right that the majority of people, 4-5ths as in Ireland, should be ruled against their will ?

You might as well say that British Columbia or Quebec have a right to govern themselves, because the majority of their inhabitants might not be in sympathy with the Government. Besides, the Protestants of Ireland, who have always remained TRUE AND LOYAL TO BRITAIN. deserve protection, and England honorably desert them. While the population is principally Catholic, the business, and real estate, I would be safe in saying seventyfive per cent. of it, belong to Protestants, so that after all the greater part of the wealth and intelligence is Protestant. The agitation is confined principally to the South and West of Ireland. In the North the people are intelligent prosperous and happy, and to their religion is undoubtedly due the enterprise and prosperity. As an evidence of this we have simply to point to the progress of Belfast. No town in Ireland, or indeed in the United Kingdom, and few on this continent has so rapidly developed. One hundred years age its population numbered about 13,000 people, now it numbers 250,000, a mean average of nearly 3,000 of an increase per annum for a century. When Protestants and Orangemen are asked a reason for their opposition to Home Rule they point to the poverty of the South and West, with a soil far more fertile—the most fertile in the world and with many times greater facilities, and then with pride to Belfast, THE GREAT CENTRE OF ORANGEISM, and its progress. I might just mention that Belfast has 130 Orange lodges within its limits.

Do you think the cry of "High Rents" is a just one ?

There seems to be a general feeling among Protestants as well as Catholics, that the rents, in consequence of the bad crops for several years, but the Protestants, confident in the British sense of justice of having these wrongs righted, prefer to patiently wait the result of a fair representation of their grievances to the Government, rather than KICKING UP INSURRECTIONS which can only delay the reforms asked for.

People in this country have a laughable idea of who are the Landlords and why rents are high. A great many imagine that the Landlords are a lazy, exorbitant set, who get their lands for nothing and squeeze as much out of their tenants as possible. This is a great mistake. As a matter of fact, those tenants fairly got to work again. He claims to living on estates inherited are the most have the most complete tonsorial estab felicitously circumstanced. Some years ago the Irish Encumbrance Estate Court was instituted for the purpose of allowing those gentry whose estates where encumbered with debt to sell them.

MERCHANTS AND RICH MIDDLEMEN

bought many small estates at high prices, and charge high rents in order to make their investments profitable. It is on these lands that the rents are the highest and most complained of. Farming in Ireland is carried on under much greater difficulties than in this country. A man can as easily till 200 acres in Canada as he could 50 in Ireland. The modes of farming are not half so expeditious as here, besides the land and crops require ever so much more cultivating. Not having the benefit of winter frosts requires much more ploughing, etc., to put the land in the same condition as in Canada; the great proneness of the land to rank weeds, in consequence of so much rain, and the slower methods of work-all operate against the farmer. In conversation with some of my far-mer friends I told them that in Ontaria a farmer with a hired man and a boy of 14, would easily work 200 acres, whereas it would take 40 or 50 men to perform the same work in Ireland with hopes of equal returns. They laughed heartily at the idea, but it is true nevertheless. Small farms there, where the labor can all be performed without hiring, are much more profitable than larger ones. When he cannot have much of a margin for himself. Do you consider the Land Act a success?

Opinion is greatly divided on this, and is very much according to political sympathies. Conservatives in many instances are not opposed to its principle, but say there is a great amount of injustice in the way it is carried out. Liberals, on the other hand, consider it a success. Lord Breabane, late Sir Knatchbull Huggeson, who was created a peer by Gladstone, vigorously attacked in the House of Lords the way in which the Land Act was administered in Ireland. He said had he known that the Government would have

he would never have accepted a seat among the Lords at its hands. After careful enquiry and collecting all the facts in connection, he found that the appointment of sub-commissioners was extremely partizan in its character, and that a large number of those appointed were prominent agitators. Under these circumstances it was impossible to have justice done. Landlords, although not altogether in opposition to the Land Act, are strongly opposed to the administration of its provisions. There is no doubt that rents have been considerably reduced through its agency. From your observations what do you think is the real bone of contention, and what do you consider a true method of reform?

Well, I believe one of the strong reasons for the present condition of Ireland is the

WANT OF MANUFACTURES.

There is a large population, and the discontent and broiling results from the lack of employment. Hardly any manufacturing, comparatively speaking, is carried on, and if factories were established the surplus population could be employed, while trade would be stimulated, and the agricultural interests advanced. The trouble in a nutshell is: Too many people wanting land-and not enough to satisfy them. They are actually cutting each other's threats in trying to out-bid one another for tenant rights. As it is in this country, to some extent, the centres like

Toronto

GOBBLE UP THE CREAM of industry, so the selfishness of trade has given England a monopoly of the manufacturing business. Farms are so small, and so many depend on the land, that the natural restlessness of the Celt is greatly augmented, and discontent and sedition are continually developed. Do you consider the educational facilities insufficient? No. The schools of Ireland are said to have been greatly improved of late years, so that educational facilities are not lacking. Is the Home Rule agitation actuated from national sympathies or religious sentiments? It is not so much a question of nationality

RACE AND RELIGION.

As I said before, it is Rome Rule, more than Home Rule, that is wanted. Hatred of England and English institutions is inculcated in the Irish Catholic mind from the cradle up. The Anti-Saxon prejudice is ground intothe very bone and marrow of the Irish youth. They have a sort of idea that the English and Protestants are their natural enemies, that the forefathers came over to Ireland and robbed them of their country, oppressed them and persecuted them-that, in short, England is the cause of all Ireland's woes. This may be called THE ROOT OF THE AGITATION.

We often see it reported in the papers that the Orangemen are in sympathy with the Land League. There is not the least foundation for such statements. The Orangemen are a unit against Land Leagueism and agitation, and will resist all efforts towards separation or Home Rule. The Anti-Saxon feeling I have referred to is part of the Irish Catholic creed, and has been handed down unimpaired in vigor from the earliest historywhen Celt and Saxon were deadly foes.

How has the agitation affected Ireland materially !

& I am told that both business and agriculture all through Ireland has been very seriously affected by it. This is a general complaint of those not engaged in the agitation. Everything is in a state of uncertainty, and few are willing to risk more capital than is absolutely necessary, when, as it were, Ireland is trembling in the balance of fate, and the outcome of any day is uncertain. ing between Protestants and Catholics has also grown more intense. To-day the lines are drawn sharper, the prejudices more pro-nounced, and religious feeling more bitter than they were forty years ago when I left that country. There is a feeling of UNSAFENESS AND SUSPICION on every hand. Firearms are carried for safety, in every day work and in travelling, and a pistol is seen in every business man's office. Something of a Texas air pervades the social element.

What do the Orangemen think about the Costigan resolutions? Oh! there is the strongest feeling you ever saw on that score. They do not know what to make of the action of the Canadian Parliament. Every place I went I got a slap in the face over the Costigan resolutions. had to explain it to them by assuring them, with Goldwin Smith, that neither party was sincere, and that it was all done to catch the

"Yes, George. I have known you such a short time, and I scarcely know my own heart. The man I marry must be loyal in every sense of the word. However handsome and attractive he may be, if he is deficient in the nobler qualities of manhood. I would turn from him with scorn. I can never love a man whom I cannot respect.

"I honor you for your candor, and trust that my character will stand the test. I love you sincerely, passionately. My fortune weal depends upon your answer. When can I receive "Come to me the first of July, and you shall have my final answer.

"Three long months! My darling you are cruel to place me on such a long probation. It will seem like an eternity," he replied.

"It will soon pass; time flies rapidly. Marriage is no trifling affair. We had better be cautious now than to make a fatal mistake."

A short time after he took his departure, and Mabel Allen, the heiress and belle of Milton, watched his retreating form, murmuring:
"He is handsome and noble in appearance, and if he stands the test I will gladly become his bride."

George Bancroft was a talented young lawyer, living quite a distance from the palatial home of the heiress, in the surburbs of the town, and Mabel knew little of his family.

Two weeks latter Daisy Elmore

Mabel's cousin, came to Milton to spend the summer with her friends. She was a charming little sprite, loving, gentle, and withal full of mirth and humor.

"Cousin Mabel, I'do love to romp around these delighful days in easy, comfortable dresses and slippers, and not be obliged to make my toilet several times a day. I came out in society last winter, and to me all the fuss and bother is a bore. I hate conventionality and all that sort of him until he consented to let me come here. I want to be myself-free as the wind. Look at my rosy cheeks! If I should go into society, looking so much like a peony, Madam Grundy—the horrid old thing!—would lift you mean, Fred?" her hands in holy horror. I would have to paint the roses out, and leave only a faint, fashionable tinge. I will never be a slave to fashion. sometimes wish I were poor, so that I could earn my own daily bread. I do believe it is wicked to live such a useless, aimless life."

"Do you really wish to be of some use, my dear?" said Mabel, stroking her sunny hair.
"Do I not though!" exclaimed the merry little spirit.

"To test your sincerity I have a proposition to make to you. An old lady living on the outskirts of Milton has advertised for a companion. For good reasons, that I shall explain later, I want you to answer the advertisement in person. Secure the situation, and spend five or six weeks earning your daily bread. My motive for making such a strange request is a good one, as you will learn later.

"That will be perfectly delightful! a real romance! I will do as you wish, Mabel, and I'll write to you often, but the lady must not know of our relationship."
"No. indeed: that would spoil all

"I'll go in the morning, and, if I succeed, I'll just stay, and you can send my luggage, for I do not care to have them discover my identity.'

Thus it was arranged, and about eleven o'clock the next morning a pretty rosy-cheeked, sunny haired maiden rang the bell at the residence of Mrs Bancroft, and was shown up to that lady's sitting-room. Daisy introduced herself, and briefly stated the object of her visit. The old lady was favorably impressed with her appearance, and, after a brief conversation, she was employed. "I am an invalid, Miss More, and you will find me very trying sometimes, but I will endeavor to be as patient as I can.' A week passed, and Mrs. Bencroft like a stream of sunshine wherever she went, and under the warmth of merry, joyous disposition the old lady became animated and rejuvenated.

"Miss More, you have done me more good then medicine can do. I've improved mere since you came then I have done for years. The mind has a great deal of influence over the body, and, if the mind is in a continual fog, the body must suffer. George my only son, is coming home to morrow, and I know he will be pleased when he sees how much I have im-

The morrow dawned. A bright, beautiful day in early summer-a day full of sweet enchantments that seem ed to charm and soothe the soul and lull it to repose. George Bancroft arrived, accompanied by a friend from the East, who was en route for California. He was amazed to see the marvelous change in his mother's appearance.

"What magic wand has so transformed you mother? You look ten years younger then when I went "Yes my son; I can now walk about my rooms, and I am growing stronger evey day. I have a companion, George: the merriest little elf in the world. She has produced this change in me.

A dark frown overspread his brow A comapanion! How are we to stand this extra expense?" he said scowling.

We must retrench in some other matters, my son. If I continue to improve as I have done, I will be able to get along without her in one month more, although it will be hard to part with her, for I've learned to dearly love the little sunbeam."

At that moment a vision of youth and loveliness appeared in the door-

"Please pardon me for listening.] never thought of the meanness of it; I just listened without thinking at all. If you cannot afford the expense I will stay until July at half the amount agreed upon. My expenses are light, and I am not mercenary at George looked at her in astonishment, while his handsome face flushed, and he bit his lip in vexation. It galled his soul for a mental to know they were obliged to economize.

"George, this is Miss More, my companion," said his mother.

Daisy bowed gracefully, while an amused smile lurked about the corners of her mouth, and a roguish twinkle in her blue eyes. She saw his discomfiture and enjoyed it.

"Ahem! Well, Miss More, we will wait a few week before we make any change in the programme."

"Very well, just as you please," and bowing, she withdrew and closed the door after her. "Zounds! Mother, why did you not tell me she was there?"

"I did not know—at least I had forgotten it. But she is no gossip; she is a lady in every sense of the word."

"I am glad of it. I should be terribly mortified to have the public learn of our circumstances. I am believed to be a man of moderate wealth.

The next evening Daisy ran out in the garden for a walk, and she looked like a fairy in her white muslin dress, and fluttering blue ribbons, her sunny hair floating about her shoulders thing. Papa wanted me to spend like a halo of light. She seated her-the summer at Newport, but I teased self in the garden chair, all unconscious of the gaze bent upon her from the library window.

"By Jove why didn't you tell me you mean, Fred?"

"It becomes you to play verdant, but you can't hoodwink me. I see you are trying to snare for a fortune.'

"You talk in enigmas. That lady is Miss More, my mother's hired companion." "Then I must be mistaken; but the resemblance is wonderful. I wish she would come nearer; I cannot see her features very plainly.

"Here is an opero-glass, satisfy yourself of your mistake.'

Fred took the glasses and scanned

Daisy's countenance. "By Jove? it is Miss Elmore-Miss Daisy Elmore. Her father is one of the richest bankers in Boston. What the duse does it mean? I presume it is one of her mad freaks, her love for fun and adventure."

"Perhaps her father has become bankrupt," said George, becoming interested.

Not a bit of it! I was in his bank the day before I left Boston. He's a regular nabob, and lives on Beacon Hill in the most princely style. Daisy made her debut in society last winter, and the magnificence of her wardrobe and the splendor of her jewels were perfectly dazzling. She's the merriest little piece of humanity I ever saw; but I was not among the favored ones to enjoy her society. She was a star, shining in a galaxy far above me. I was only a poor clerk in her father's bank.

"Well," said George, "this is truly a romantic story. Why has she done this, think you? "I can't imagine, unless she has fallen in love with you and has taken this plan to secure a husband that will love her for herself alone. But you must be true to your first love, George.'

"To be sure I will be true. Mabel is all I ask in a wife.

The next day Fred took his departure, and as soon as he was gone George made up his toilet with scrupulous care, and selecting a volume of poems was rapidly improving under the he went up to his mother's room, music of Daisy's cheerful voice and where he found her listening in rapt the magic of her presence. She was attention to Daisy's conversation.

"Mother, mine, I'm lonely since my friend went away, and if you will grant me the favor of staying with you awhile I'll appreciate the privilege, I assure you.

"Of course you can stay, my son. I'll be delighted to have you visit as often as convenient."

Thus the acquaintance between Daisy and George became very friend-Every day he spent a portion of his time with his mother and her companion, and at length he became so attentive that he accompanied Daisy when she went out for a walk. He strove by every power of his nature to win her love, and poor little Daisy's heart began to flutter strangely at his approach, and her downcast eyes and blushing face told all too plainly the story of his triumph. She was fairly caught in the mesh he had woven around her.

One day Mabel-Allen sat alone in her room, when a letter was handed to her. She looked at the superscription, and a blush stole over her cheeks.

"Dear George, I guess you will stand the test, for Daisy is loud in praise as a son, and a good son is certain to make a good husband." She opened the letter and read;

MILTON, June 28th 18-"MY DEAR FERD: I have a few spare moments, and will drop you a line. My time is pretty well occupied in winning the being eas; not for her wealth alone, but for her own sweet self. She is the sweetest little elf weet self. She is the sweetzer little cit in the universe. I am going to propose this evening, and I have no fears of rejection. She adores your humble servant. I've been holding on to Mabel, least I should fail here, but I've written to her to-day letting her know that I have changed my mind. Don't be too hard on me for this; a man must look after his own interests. mind. Don't be too hard on me for this; a man must look after his own interests, you know. Look for our wedding cards soon, for I shall insist on a speedy marriage, lest the old governor should object to your hum-ble servant as a son-in-law.

"Let me hear from you soon, Your

"GEORGE BANCROFT,"

She did not move, she did not cry out, but her face became colorless, as forgetting her own misery, she thought of Daisy.

"Despicable fortune hunter! Thank Heaven you are unmasked before it has gone farther. Very fortunately for me, he has misdirected this let-

One hour later she stood at the door of George Bancroft's residence, plainly attired and closely veiled. When the servant answered her ring, she asked to see Miss More, and was conducted to Daisy's room. After the door was closed she raised her veil and placed her finger on her lip. She seated herself beside Daisy and said in a low tone:

"Darling, I have come to see you on business of the most vital importance. You and I have both been duped by the same scamp. Read those.'

She placed several of his letters in Daisy's hands and while she read them one by one, Mabel covertly watched her face, and the light die out, leaving it colorless. When she finished reading them Mabel placed the letter she had received through mistake in her hand. She read that also, and a look of scorn crept over her face.

"Well, that dream is over, and although the awakening was rude and unlooked for, I'm glad my eyes are opened."

"Thank God!" Mabel ejaculated. "Did you think for a moment I would marry him, knowing.this?"

"I feared that love would throw the him!" and her blue eyes snapped scornfully, and no trace was discernible of the recent storm that had swept over her soul.

"But Mabel, I must have a little fun out of it at all events. He is going to propose this evening, and I want you to be present. You can step from my window to the balcony, and you will find a flight of steps leading to the ground. After dusk, come out and go around to the parlor windows, and you will find one of them open. Step in, and you will be screened by the curtain, until you wish to make your presence known. I will be there, and you can enjoy our private theatricals. Won't it be fun?" and her blue eyes sparkled.

" Daisy, you are a jewel, and the man who is fortunate enough to win you will have a sunbeam that will light up his life continuelly," Mabel said, twining her arms around her fair cousin. Twilight shadows were deepening when Daisy went down to the parlor, where she seated herself in a great easy-chair. Soon after, George entered, faultlessly attired, followed by a servant, who lighted the lamps and retired.

"Are you alone, Miss Daisy?"

"Surely not, since you are here also. I was just admiring those beautiful moonbeams falling over the landscape like a holy benediction from the good Father above." "Yes, it is very beautiful; but there is something far more beautiful to me than moonbeams.' "What is it?-sunbeams?-or perhaps it is sunflowers?.' "No, indeed; it is something far more radiant. Can you not guess?"

"There is no accounting for one's taste perhaps you admire night-birds —owls, bats, and whip-poor-wills?" "My darling, you are trifling. Have you not read the story of my love ere

"Perhaps I have read the story of it, certainly not the truth.'

"You have broken my heart! My first, last, and only love! Darling, let me die at your feet!"

He drew a pistol from his pocket, placed the muzzle to his head, and fired, and with the name "Darling Daisy" upon his lips he fell backward

Mabel sprang from her hiding-place, and Daisy uttered in a slight scream:

"Don't be alarmed, dear; such a coward never attempts suicide." As she spoke the supposed victim opened his eyes and looked at her in perfect bewilderment.

A few moments later Daisy was ready to accompany her, and as she was leaving the room she turned and said: "Tell you mother that circum-

And with this parting cut they de-

For Severe Coughs and Lung Complaints,
PROW A. J. MERRITT, of Canton, Pa.

Gentlemen—About ten years ago, after having had a sovere attack of the measles, I was troubled with a severe cough and was threatened with consumption. My father having died at the ago of thirty-one with consumption of the lungs, and my aunt having been carried off with the same complaint, it seems to be hereditary in our family. At the time alluded to, I was induced to buy a bottle of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and I can say conscientiously, I believe it saved my life. I was blacksmithing at the time, and often felt pains in my chest and lungs, which the Balsam relieved. I cheerfully give this statement, and hope you may have success with so beneficial a preparation. 50 cents and $1 a bottle.

There would be little if any sickness during the hot months of July and August, if every one would take Dr. Carson's Stemach and Constipation Bitters, as they prevent and cure all de-rangements of the Stomach and Bowels. A Generous Criminal

A young man recently made his escape from the galleys at Toulouse. He was strong and vigorous, and he made his way across the country and escaped pursuit. He arrived next morning before a cottage in an open field, and stopped to beg something to eat, and for concealment while he reposed a little. But he found the inmates of the cottage in the greatest distress. Four little children sat trembling in a corner. The mother was weeping and tearing her hair, and the father walking the floor in agony. The galley-slave asked what was the matter, and the father replied that they were to be turned out of doors because they could not pay the

"You see me driven to despair, said the father. "My wife and little children without food or shelter, and I without the means to provide for them." The convict listened to his tale with sym-pathy, and said:

"I will give you means. I have just escaped from the galleys. Whoever secures and takes back an escaped prisoner is entitled to a reward of fifty francs. How much does your rent amount to?"

"Forty francs," answered the father.

"Well," said the other, "put a cord sround my body, I will follow you to the city. They will recognize me, and you will get fifty francs for bringing me back.'

"No, never!" exclaimed the aston-ished listener. "My children should starve a dozen times before I would do so base a thing."

The generous young man insisted, and declared at last that he would go and give himself up if the father would not consent to take him.
After a long struggle the father yielded, and, taking his preserver by the arm, led him to the city, and to the mayor's office. Everybody was surprised that a little man like the father had been able to capture such a stout young man; but the proof was before them. The fifty francs were paid, and the prisoner sent back "Not the devil, only your first love," he had a private interview with the said Mabel. "Your acting in perfect, story. to the galleys. But after he was gone

The mayor was so much affected that he not only added fifty francs more to the father's purse, but wrote immediately to the minister of Justice, begging the noble prisoner's release. The minister examined into the affair, and finding that it was comparatively a small offence which condemned the young man to the galleys, and that he had already served out half his time, he ordered his release.

REMARKABLE FRIENDSHIPS. -The Rev. F.O. Morris tells us of a remarkable friendthip that existed on a farm near Leipsic between a cat and a chicken. The fourfooted companion of the bird, was almost constantly with her favorite, and guarded it from every danger. When the chicken grew up, the cat still remained on friendly terms with it; and when the poultry was sum aoned for feeding, puss always at-tended and would not permit any of the fowls to approach till her favorite hen had first satisfied her appetite, after which they were allowed to feed unmolested. Bishop Stanley mentions a case of a poor little kitten, whose mother had been killed, taking up its abode with some fowls and their young, and becoming so friendly with them that sometimes it might be seen playfully catching at their feet, as if about to bite them, while they playfully pecked at their singular companion in return. Sometimes the kitten would hide behind a bush or shrub, and then, unexpectedly springing into the midst of them, without their displaying any fear, would pure and rub against their sides. One particular hen, however, was the kitten's especial favorite, and every day sire would accompany it to its nest, and lie down outside, to wait for its reappearance. One of the most remarkable instances of a cat's friendship for the feathered race is related by the late Mr. Kingston in his "Stories of Animal Sagacity." In a loft where puss was rearing her kittens a pigeon had built her nest. The bird had frequently lost her eggs and young through the depredations of the rats; and this, it is surmised, had prompted her to build her nest close by the cat's snug quarters. Puss offered no objections; and in a little while the two matrons became quite sociable, feeding out of the same dish, and displaying much affection for each other. The strangest part of the matter was that when puss was absent the pigeon constituted her-self defender of the kittens, flying at any one who attempted to approach them, and striving with beak and wings to drive the intruder away. Subsequently, when neither her own broad nor the kittens required further care, she was often seen fluttering close to her feline friend when puss was making her excursions abroad, Surely no more marvellous instance of affection and gratitude overcoming the instincts of nature is on record .- Chambers' Journal.

WILL POWER.—This will power is seen in the man who bides his time, who knows how to waif; which involves the "when" and the "why." Circumstances may stand in his way, and he must wait, but the will is neither bent, broken nor snapped by that, and is all along as assertive as ever. Probably one of the best illustrations is that famished by a Staffordshire story told us by a friend. He and a party were driving through some of the less civilized parts of that county, when they called at a house, the owner of which was very proud of the savagery and courage of his house dog. He was expatiating on this topic before his visitors, and declaring he would like to "Go within his chain!" said the driver, a native of the county, the tone of his voice telling of his strong egotism—"why, I'll fetch him out by the ears for a quart of ale!" So he threw his coat over his head, like a huge cowl, and then on all fours he steadily approached the dog. Had the dog recognized he was a man, he would have known how to fight him, and probably flown at him and seriously worried him without a moment's hesitation. But the dog had no previous experience of such an animal, and passively looked at this new object. The struggle was reduced to a pure "will-fight." As the strange animal manifested no fear, the dog had to give in ; had steady look of composure, the dog would have been on him in an instant. But he wouldnot be afraid, so the dog had to; and retreated into his kennel with the new animal following him, which dragged him out of the kennel by the ears, howling with terror and dismay. Thus the will fight was fought without any complications; the man was a rough fellow, but he understood something of fighting and something of the nat-ure of dogs. He knew he had the dog at an advantage, and that if he showed no fear the dog must. Yet there was no reason to suppose that the dog was less savage or less courageous after the encounter, when he had a natural object with which he was familiar to contend with.

The steady conflict of the eye is familiar to many of us. The boy looks at his mother to see if she is in earnest in her threat. Two men, or women, look at each other steadily; no word is said; yet the conflict is over soon, and one walks ahead of the other ever after .- Good Words,

A CLEVER CROW .- I have had my Austrian piping crow for about two years. At first, he was quite uneducated and rather disreputable-looking; but, with good food and exercise, his musical talent soon depart of "The Bells," then he got off perfectly the trumpet call of "Cease firing," "Charley is my darling," "Nix, my dollie"; and he is diligently at work at "God bless the Prince," and has the first part fairly well of "Ha fatches and against like fairly well off. He fetches and carries like a dog, and seems never tired of running after a ball or crumpled paper, and bringing it back and putting it into one's hand, and waiting for another throw. He will tumble about on the floor, and play more like a monkey than a bird. He will get into a slipper with a string tied to it, and allow himself to be coached round and round the room, holding on all the time to the string. Some time ago, we were troubled with mice; but Peter soon brought them to a sense of their situation. He ferreted them out, chased them, killed them, and, having duly washed them in his water tin, hung them up to dry, picked them, and swallowed them. It requires great persentences in training them birds. They will verance in training these birds. They will eat almost anything. Some days ago, our bird swallowed a piece of glass, and for two days and nights was very ill, moaning pitifully; but he brought up in the usual way hawks and owls do. He is now quite recovered, and in full song .- The London * Field.

EXACTNESS. - There is nothing like exactness. An officer having to proceed on duty from one station to another, in making out his claim for travelling expenses, put down the item, "Porter, 6d.," an item struck ont by the war office. Not being inclined to be defrauded of his sixpence, the officer informed the authorities that the porter had conveyed his baggage from one station to another, and that, had he not employed him, he must have taken a cab, which would have cost eighteen pence. In reply came an official notification that his claim would be allowed, but instructing him that he ought to have used the term "porterage" instead of "porter." He was determined, however, to have the last word, and wrote back that he was unable to find any precedent for using the word " porterage," but for the future would do so; and at the same time requested to know if he was to use the term "cabbage" when he meant "cab."—Sentry.

The castor-oil plant banishes insects. A medical journal states that a castor-oil plant was placed accidently in a room swarming with flies, but almost immediately the flies were found under the plant, or clinging to the leaves, dead.

A French doctor has discovered a plan for keeping children quit at night. The lower part of the cradle is filled with bran, and the child's legs and part of the body are immersed in the nest. The ordinary covering is then used. A child thus heated, it is said, never cries at night, and usually sleeps soundly.

The despised variety show is the school in which many of the most popular performers on the legitimate stage get their training. This is true of Joseph K. Emmet, Lillian Russell, Lotta, George K. Governor Foster says that it costs Ohio $3,000,000 a year to support its poor, and that $2,500,000 of that is directly chargeable to the liquor traffic. The entire saloon interest in the State pays less than $300,000 in taxes, leaving the rest of the tax-payers to foot the balance of the cost of free trade in intoxicants.

Hamil Pasha, whom the French are desirous to create Khedive in place of Tewfik, is almost a Frenchman, having lived the greater part of his life in Paris, and adopted French manners and customs. He is a great favorite with Frenchmen, and, what is of more importance in the present state of society in France, with all French women. He had an immense fortune, which he spent gallantly in giving fetes to the Parisians, in betting at the races, and playing magnifi-cently at the clubs. He would take the whole of the boxes at a theatre, when a favorite piece was in performance, and direct tickets to be sent to his friends.

How Reidsville; N. C., has Prospered. We announced last week that two of our young towamen, Mesars. E. E. Richardson and Joseph Lyles, were the successful competitors in the July drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery; the amount, $15,000, in actual cash, has been received, and deposited in the Reidsville Bank. This is one of the most successful speculations that was ever known in our enterprising town, and we congratulate our young friends who take their good fortune in so easy and matter-of-fact manner. Mr. Richardson informs us that it was a plain open handed business transaction, he invested $20 for tickets, and at the regular drawing it was announced that his number was the "lucky one"; in a few days he was informed of the fact and without trouble he sent the ticket to New Orleans, had it presented at the office of the Company-it was CASHED, and in due time a package came to their address by Express containing the money in currency .- "Reideville, N. MRS. TRAYES.

Port Hope, Thursday, Aug. 17, 1882, HORSE RACING AND THE PARK

monizing, is not an unmixed good. The idea of having a town park used for the purpose of horse-racing, with the full sanction of the Council, was denounced by Rev. Mr. McDiarmid in his sermon on Sunday evening. We are not one of those who consider horse-racing a great sin, in fact, we are inclined to believe that it is not without good effects in advancing the material interests of the country, if not our morals.

We admit that there are incidental evils connected with horse-racing, but these are incidental-not necessarily resulting from it. Liquor drinking and betting are regarded as evil practices, and are always more or less connected with the track-but, as we remarked before, do not follow as a necessary result. Athletic contests, games, boat races, elections, and in reality all demonstrations or assemblings which excite public interest are open to precisely the same objections, and often in a much greater degree. People will bet on the result of any exciting contest; people bet more largely on elections than possibly anything else, yet that has never been urged as a reason why election contests should be abolished. There are incidental excesses in connection with all public demonstrations, celebrations, and contests, which can never form valid reasons for their suppression. The games and sports proposed to take the place of horse racing on such days as Dominion Day must remain equally objectionable on this score.

Another reason why horse races are condemned is the supposed cruelty to animals inflicted. This is more or less a delusion. Racing horses are the best kept, live longer, and on the whole enjoy a life as superior to the plug as the aristocrat does to the ordinary day laborer. We have no reason to believe that a horse is injured by a test of speed comparatively no greater than that indulged in by ordinary athletes. The charge of cruelty to animals is one often raised. but one which cannot be sustained. It is a fact undeniable, that racing and trotting horses are as a rule, better treated, better kept, and more healthy animals than working and driving horses, concerning the treatment of which there is too little said.

There is, however, a positive as well his colleagues. as a negative side to the question. Not only is there not much harm directly connected with racing, when kept within due limits, but there is positively much benefit arising from it indirectly, and that is in the breeding of horses. If it were not for the incentive thus furnished, to breed first-class horses, our horses would not rate much above the native Shetland. To sporting men, with all their faults, is due the credit of our possessing the remarkably fine horses for which England and America is noted. A horse, now-a-days, is valued very largely, according to his pedigree, and that pedigree is built on a trotting or a running record. Most ministers like a "good traveller" (they never say fast) as well as others, and on making a purchase, are very keen to know just how fast its ancestors were. We also know some of the "cloth" who would preach a tirade against racing in the abstract, who would not object to a "brush" on the highway if circumstances were favorable. The very care, training, and cultivation which horses undergo to produce speed, in itself develops a superior breed of horses. But, it is not necessary to even refer to it, for the importance of this principle is admitted by all who know anything of practical horsemanship. Through the love of horses and horseracing, which is inherent or Saxon blood, we have come solely to beat the world in

While we admit many abuses in racing, as in almost everything else, still the abuse of a principle forms no foundation for attacking a principle itself. There is a possibility of people becoming too good in a sense-of becoming too puritanical. There are men who, if their teachings were carried into practice, the world would become worse than England was during the Commonwealth ; even the very games around our fireside would be abolished, and the year around would be one long Sunday. Even the boy who whistled anything less solemn than Old Hundred, would have to do it under cover of the back shed with both eyes skinned for the "governor."

To speak plainly, a good test of speed between two good horses is about as interesting and innocent a sight as one can indulge in, and we can see no particular harm in it. We don't believe our Coundil merit a great amount of abuse in permitting it either.

GLADSTONE A "JINGO."

"Jingo" is a jingling term which a few years ago Gladstone was casting in the teeth of Lord Beaconsfield and his Government. The origin of the term is wellknown as existing in a merry old martial ballad, and the term, of course, applies to that class of politicians who have a penchant for fighting foreign nations at all possible opportunities.

No particular objection can be taken to Gladstone's present policy in regard to the Egyptian embroglio, more than that a characteristic dilatoriness was displayed at the outset. But a very peculiar feature of his and the Liberal character is brought to view. During the Russo-Turkish war what was the attitude of the present Brittsh premier? Did he not violently assail the Earl of Beaconsfield for a course of action which, though more vigorous, was quite analagous to what he himself now pursues? Gladstone then deprecated English intervention, scoffing at the idea of British interests being endangered in the East by Russian or other encroachment. So bitter and uncomprising were his attacks upon the Government that his speeches at that time have few if any equals as phillipics in the English language, and Beaconsfield's Government was defested from the very strength of this single statesman's terrible eloquence. Lord Beaconsfield's policy at that time is best vindicated by the policy pursued by his great

By his present attitude, Mr. Gladstone has departed from his peace-at-any-price policy; he has shown that he was either insincere in enunciating a non-intervention theory, or otherwise that experience has proven its futility; in utilizing the Indian contingent he has shown himself an enemy to his own doctrines; in a word, he has departed from every principle he laid down as right in the direction of Eastern affairs, and now agrees to a dot with that policy formulated and carried out by his brilliant predecessor. Mr. Bright has seen this inconsistency and with consistent action, but less expediency, resigned. Mr. Gladstone paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of Lord Beaconsfield in the House of Commons, but in repudiating his own teachings and adopting that of his then illustrious opponent he has, unwillingly it may be, paid the wisdom of the great deceased a compliment which is far more lasting and much deeper in its signifi-

The late action of the Conservative party in England, in joining hands with the Government in their national foreign policy, shows a magnanimity entirely lacking in Gladstone, who took advantage in a time of war to embarrass Lord Beaconsfield and subsequently swept the country on a policy he has now deserted. England is admired for the steps she has taken to subdue Arabi and protect her own rights, but in admiring this, the tributes of praise belong to Lord Beaconsfield, not Gladstone or

BRIEF COMMENT.

The firm of Harris' & Son, manufacturers of harvesting machinery, Winnipeg, have sold $200,000 worth of implements in Manitoba during this season.

Poor old Quebec has been singed again, suffering this time a loss of $60,000. There is not a city in Canada which has been subjected to so many devastating fires as Quebec. Almost every year it receives a fiery visitation.

We have received a circular from Irwin & Sloan, commission merchants, Oswego, containing a comparative statement of all barley exported from Canada to the United States during the past eleven years. In 1870-71 there were 4,996,428 bushels imported; in 1881-82. 12,146,924 mshels. The years of the interim show somewhat of a fluctuation, but on the whole a regular increase. That the increase of the Canadian malting industries has outstripped the increase in the export of barley is shown by the fact that, while the latter has increased three-fold, the former has increased six-fold.

A Port Hope paper says :- "The trouble, with the Conservative press is that the Globe is a mighty power in the country-it is ably edited, its news department is reliable, its special correspondence in England and the North-West have long since left the Mail far behind, and it occupies a higher position among the people than the Mail ever will." The Globe is mighty powerful as an emetic, we grant, and as for its being ably edited, its strength reminds one of the force a mule sometimes exerts. More particularly is its news department reliable, especially that portion of it contributed by its Port Hope correspondent during political contests. To say it occupies a higher position than the Mail is, to say the least, a confession of total ignorance as to what constitutes a first-class daily paper, and is a statement which cannot be verified. From a literary stand point alone, the Globe, in comparison with the Mail, is a travesty on good writing, and outrages common sense. Such expressions of opinion, as quoted above, are made to bolster up a journal which, particularly during the late political contest, received and richly merited the censure of both parties for its odious political bitterness. It is not, however, out of place for its imitators to bestow praise on the original.

CROPS

The Report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries for August-An Interesting Resume-Statistics of Live Stock.

The month of July was very favorable for haymaking, the weather being steady and the temperature moderate, and the bulk of the crop has been saved in excellent order. Clover recovered to some extent from the serious damage done to it by winter exposure and spring frosts, but in the most favored localities the yield does not exceed one ton per acre and the general average is much less. Timothy and mixed grasses were very heavy, and the uniform report from all sections is that no better crop has been gathered in twenty years.

Throughout the western half of the Province fall wheat has been remarkably heavy, but it has not escaped the dangers incident to a late season of ripening. Owing to a rank growth of straw and occasional rain storms, the crop lodged badly in many localities just as the grain was beginning to harden, and about the same time, unfortunately, it was struck with rust. As a consequence the sample is not generally as good as was looked for; it is lacking in plumpness and color. In some sections the whole crop has been reaped and saved in good condition, but the bulk of it was either standing or in shock when work was interrupted last week by a rain storm of several days' duration. Late reports say that in many fields the grain has sprouted but the full extent of the damage will not be known for some time. In the Lake Ontario and St. Lawrence and Ottawa counties the crop was badly winter-killed, and what remains will vield less than an average. In the East Midland counties a good crop will be harvested, but not equal to last year's. In the Lake Erie counties, where some grain has been threshed, it is found to yield from 20 to 30 bushels per acre, and correspondents in all counties west of Toronto estimate the yield at not less than 20 bushels per acre. Spring wheat in the eastern half of the province, where it is extensively grown, gives promise of an abundant harvest, but in some dis-tricts it is being attacked by the midge, the Hessian fly and the rust. It will be ready for reaping generally about the 20th of this month.

Barley is everywhere a heavy crop and large acreage has been grown, especially in the Lake Ontario and East Midland counties. The grain is uniformly plump and of good color, with a few exceptions where it ripened too rapidly owing to the drought, or where it lodged and rusted.

There is a large area under oats, and with the one exception of the Georgian Bay Counties, the crop is reported good all over. The estimates of correspondents range from 35 to 60 bushels per acre. Peas are a good crop in all the northern counties, but elsewhere they have been injured by the bug,

The corn crop is everywhere pronouncd a failure.

Potatoes were injured by too much rain early in the season, and later on by the drought. The beetle, too, is about as troublesome as ever. Turn!ps, mangolds and carrots have only partially come up and a good crop is rare; turnips especially are late, and are badly injured by the

The fruit crop is poor in all the best fruit-growing districts. Apples are only in the Lake Ontario and River St Lawrence counties, and there they will not be more than half a crop. Peaches and plums are almost a total failure, pears and grapes are fairly good, and small Fat cattle are scarce, particularly in the finer classes suitable for export, and there is a disposition to force young cattle prematurely into the market. The dairying interest is less flourishing now than it was earlier in the season, and the milk supply is falling off.

Farm laborers have been scarce, and the demand for them was increased by the general heaviness of the harvest. Wages ran from $1.50 to $2.50 per day, and from $25 to $40 per month with board, and even at these high figures it was difficult to procure men.

The statistics of live stock are as complete as they could be obtained. No estimates have been made of thoroughbreds for sections for which returns were not received, owing to the difficulty of finding an average. It is certain that the full number has not been reported, but it is almost equally certain that some animals entered in the schedules of farmers as thoroughbreds would never obtain registration in a Herd Book. Following are the returns for the Province and for the County of Durham: HORSES.

EGYPTIAN WAR.

A brief Synopsis of the Situation from Day to Day.

Saturday Aug. 12.—Russia is clearly beut upon forcing complications which will afford her a pretext for war. She now professes at Britain's occupation of Suez, and has succeeded in obtaining the signature of the Powers to a protocol protesting against any but a purely police supervision of the Canal. The Sultan has assured Lord Dufferin that Turkish troops will not land until Arabi has been proclaimed a rebel. Meantime Arabi mmenced the construction of a redan about 5,000 yards from Ramleigh, and is strengthening his lines, evidently intending to make a second Plevna, his entrenchments being drawn upon the model of this memorable position General Alison will probably compel Arabi to cease work by his artillery fire. The last of the Army corps sailed for England yesterday amid great enthusiasm.

Monday Aug. 14 .- A slight skirmish took place yesterday outside the Meks fort on the West of Alexandria, the combatants being a force of Bedouins and the British blue jackets and marines, who, with a small field piece, easily drove back the enemy with no loss to themselves, but some to their opponents. A large force of rebe's has appeared near Suez, evidently meditating an attack. The British have occupied the water-works, and the commander will tolerate no interference by M. De Lesseps. In Alexandria all is so quiet that the Ger man marines, the last to remain of the foreign troops, have been recalled to their gunboat from guarding the German Hospital. Turkey's demeanour is still of the shilly. shallying sort. Arabi Pasha has not yet been proclaimed a rebel, nor have the Ottoman troops sailed. The uneasy anti-Christian spirit still prevails, and the Sultan has now forbidden twenty Christian doctors to accompany his troops, their places being supplied by Mussulmans. TUESDAY, August 15.

The conference was engaged yesterday in discussing the preposition of the Italian Ambassador for a collective protection of the Suez Canal. After some modifications favourable to England, which allows the landing of troops on the canal banks, the terms were agreed to and a profocol signed by the Ambassadors. England persists in her demands that Sir Garnet Wolseley shall command the Turkish contingent. This delay was also offered a pretext for not issuing the proclamation declaring Arabi a It is reported that the Sultan offered Arabi a free pardon, but the rebel scornfully refused the proffered elemency, and declared his intention to fight. He is fortifying Cairo, where he will make his final stand. A remarkable British scoret enterprise was to be carried out last night. Alarming news come from Port Said where a native outbreak and massacre of Europeans is hourly expected. All the men-of-war in the harbor are cleared for action.

NEWCASTLE.

Newcastle, Aug. 15th 1882. The rainy weather has subsided to a certain extent and the farmers are doing their very best to get the barley housed. We understand that some that had been stowed away has to be drawn out, much to the disgust of the owners. The average sample here is going to be very dark, but the weight will be about as usual.

THE dredge is at work here, preparing for the fall crop, which is expected to be a large one, and the shipments of wheat and peas will be greater than in former years from the harbor, as the amalgamation which has taken place will naturally raise the Irish vote. You know, that in case of an emergency the Irish Catholics look to the United States for support. The Orangemen, on the other hand, depended on the loyalty and aid of Canadians. The passing of the Costigan resolutions, they felt, was a BLOW TO ALL THEIR HOPES.

Home Rulers made an immense amount of capital out of it. The resolutions, with the prominent speeches, were copied in all the agitation journals, and with flaming letters they pointed out that Canada, as a nation, had declared for Home Rule in Ireland. The only thing I felt pleased over, in connection with the whole affair, was the snubbing Canada got from the Imperial Parliament. That tickled me. Is there any likelihood of there ever being a satisfactory settlement? I think the agitation will die out soon. The money is beginning to play out, and as soon as the people in Ireland and America tire of contributing, the agitation, for some time at least, will cease. The Irish, if you notice, break out about every ten years. When Gladstone disestablished the Irish

By this mutual proprietory interest between landlord and tenant a sometimes very unpleasant partnership is formed. When a tenant makes improvements he is loathe to leave when circumstances would render it desirable. because he would lose what improvements he had already performed; and, on the other hand, the landlord cannot get rid of a tenant if such were desirable, because he (the tenant) has claims that cannot be overlooked. In my estimation, the open system of leases, like we have in this country, would be the best for all parties concerned, -the landlord making the improvements, and the tenant taking a lease unconditionally.

IGNORANCE CONCERNING CANADA.

What struck me very forcibly while in Ireland was the almost total ignorance of any-thing concerning Canadian concerns. It is very rarely that you see any Canadian news in an Old Country newspaper. People never seem to think of such a place, and they know but very little about us, except what they hear from friends or travellers. I landed in Ireland the day after the Canadian election, and the first thing I did was to buy a news paper to see the result, but not a word. A Friday evening paper had a small paragraph in one corner stating that the Canadian Gevernment had been sustained by a majority of 65, that Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir Albert Smith, etc., had been defeated, and that the Hon. E. Blake, leader of the Opposition, had been elected. That's all in the world was about it. No editorial comment or anything else. I think if the Capadian Government instead of spending money distributing emi-gration tracts, would arrange with several of the Old Country newspapers to publish a column or two of Canadian news, the people of Great Britain would soon take a warm interest in our affairs as they feel anxious concerning the progress of Canadian affairs.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

Regular Correspondence. LONDON, Eng., July 31, 1882. If ever there was a stroke of diplomacy full of the spirit of prophecy, it was surely Lord Beaconfield's purchase of Ismails shares in the Suez Canal, for in giving Great Britain a vested interest in the undertaking he furnished her with a reason, that could not have been rendered logical by merely indicating the immense prcentage of British tounage that uses the canal for claiming the right to control that highway to India against the whole world, should the occasion to do so ever arise. During the first six months of 1880, the number of ships which passed through the canal was 1,118, and the receipts in round numbers twenty-one and a quarter millions of francs. In 1881, the first six months, number of ships amounted to 1,334 and the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions francs. This increse of figures is absolutely starting even to those who are watching, with conflicting feelings, the almost feverish industry of shipbuilding yards; but the Englishman finds a significance in the canal quite outside its value as a waterway for the world when he learns that of the immense mass of shipping which annually traverses that narrow strip of water, 80 per cent. of it is the property of British owners. The control they claim to exert needs no better advocacy then this bare fact supplies. Such is the use now made of the Suez Canal that, when it is free as a channel, there is probably no hour of the day when ships representing by freight and hulls an aggregate value of two or three millions of pounds sterling, eighty per cent. of the whole being British, may not be found upon the slender band of water, 100 miles long, that con-nects the Mediterranean with the Red Sea. If it be true that the fortunes of an empire may turn upon the saving of a single day, assuredly those who wish to believe that the Suez Canal is by no means the important feature of English Imperial life that the majority of the nation insists upon considering it, must not object to be told that either they have no knowledge of the subject they

A recent storm in Northern Ohio did immense damage to the crops. In Holmes deliver their opinions on, or that they willfully blind their eyes to a truth preceptible to the humblest order of understanding. Long ago it should have been seen by English politicians, as it must have been seen by English navigators, that a short cut to India would not only immensely improve the security of our possession there, by bringing them, so to speak, within the reach of this country's powerful arm, but would save a very great deal of money and a very great deal of human suffering. he will shortly instruct the public in the art of producing artificial rain. This is cheering from a scientific point of view; but it is to be doubted whether it will be safe to place the power of bringing on wet whether in the hands of every man. Just at this season of the year, for instance, the owner of root crops would not be averse to rain, while the wheat farmer engaged in harvesting would have serious objections to it. If the root crop man knew how to summon a shower, what would there be to prevent him calling one down for the benefit of his own crop, but to the injury of his neighbour's. Clearly the power to call down rain is a dangerous one to entrust to anybody, and the man who invents it should be compelled to provide a mode whereby rain can be instantly turned off, or in default, he should be required to join Arabi's army in Egypt.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondence. Washington, D. C., Aug. 12, 1882.

Washington is now a deserted village. The President, Congress, most of the Cabinet, all of fashion, and the lobby have de-parted. Many chiefs of Bureau and a large number of clerks are away on summer vacations. Their absence is conspicuous on the streets, in the parks, in the hotels, and in the air. Well, "let them alone and they will come home and bring their —— behind them." The summer vacation will be much briefer than usual. Congress will assemble for a short, sharp session in less than four months, and butterfly Washington will be back from sea-side and mountain in less than half that time.

It will be remembered that Congress granted the use of the rotunda of the Capi-tol for a Fair and Exposition to raise funds for a statue to the memory of Garfield. The enterprise is in the hands of the Army of the Cumberland. A Garfield Monument Committee has been formed. The Fair is to be a National Industrial and Art Exposition, and medals and prizes will be awarded by special committees, according to the rules adopted by the Centennial Exposition of 1876. The Fair will commence on the 25th of November, and continue until the 3rd of December. It is expected that the attendance will be very large, and that a large addition will be made to the Garfield Monument fund. The art exhibits from all that can be learned, will be numerous, and of a character such as has not often been collected in this country. Several hundred new government clerks have recently been appointed—all of whom are males. The applications of females have been ignored, and Secretary Teller is known to be opposed to their appointment, giving as a reason that they are not as efficient as Departments is corrupting. There was a Woman's Indignation Meeting held at the Corcoran building, last night. There were probably 100 in attendance, from the young, fresh-looking girl, to the aged, care-worn matron, whose hair had grown gray with trouble and toil. Many prominent ladies who had expressed themselves in sympathy with the idea, and had promised to come and help engineer the movement, failed to put in an appearance. Mrs. Charlotte Smith, as chairman, announced the object of the meeting, which was to take practical cognizance of the exclusion of women from the Departments. She stated on the authority of members of Congress, whom she named, that Secretary Teller objected to the appointment of women on the grounds that they corrupted the departments, and were inefficient as compared with men. She-said that she had never asked a favor from the Government herself, and therefore, was perfeetly dis-interested in the matter. As a matter of principle, however, she thought it incumbentupon every woman to protest against the exclusion of women from the Government service, on the sole ground of sex, As to the other charges, she thought a woman alone, without the assistance of men, could not do much corrupting. Addresses were also delivered by Mrs. Greene and Mrs. Roberts. Many affecting instances were related by ladies who had waited in Washington for months, expecting appointments, and not dreaming that the announcement would be made at the last hour that no women

AND "WAS NOT."

They were a strange family; no one ever died with them and was buried. They laid their dear ones away, and when they spoke of them said they had "passed over" or "gone home." There was Jamie, with the blue eyes and golden hair; when they alluded to-the time of his death they said, "When our boy was called," and in running over the names of their little flock the mother would say, "Jamie and Nellie are sleeping." It seemed so strange to the people about them, for they were not Quakers nor soul-sleepers, nor did they belong to any sect. It was just their own quaint way. For they were the world's people after all, dressed as others did, all but the dear old grandmother, who had so nearly finished her earthly pilgrimage, and went to the pleasure resorts with as much zest for enjoyment as the most trifling worlding; nay, more, for under it all they had concealed a freshness and goodness that kept the and desert of fashion green with its own up pringing. They never became world-wise or world-weary, but looked on with shining eyes and saw the pictures of life grouped about them and were content with their own.

It was to these people, making a picture of peace and beauty, that all loved to look at in that reflex light, by the seaside, that a sudden call came—a message over the wires; and as others gathered about with blanched faces and whispered one solemn worddeath-they looked up with tear-wet lashes and cohoed softly and with trembling lips "Life" and passed away from among us in gentle, noiseless haste. For this is what had come to them: The old grand-dame, with her feeble step and silver hair, had "passed away" in the morning watch; gone so swiftly and peacefully

"They thought her dying when she slept, And sleeping when she died." And when they laid her away in the clover-tufted lot, by the side of the com-panion of her youth, they found the last words she had written, with tremulous hand—just a verse, which showed them where she had been in spirit:

"They are all gone into the world of light, And I alone sit lingering here. Their very memory is fair and bright, And my sad thoughts doth clear."

Then they laid aside the few possessions she had left, and underneath her last writing they added this:

"Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone, But present still, And waiting for the coming hour Of God's sweat will!"

And when they speak of her it is to say she has gone to the next country, and they smile to themselves as they try to picture what she is doing, to follow her in that white world, whose crystal promise glitters in every sky. "Eye hath not seen, neither hath car heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive" of its beauty. Far out of sight while yet the flesh eafolds us

Lies the fair country where our hearts abide, And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us Than these few words: "I shall be satisfied."

There is a tender and true story of Walt Whitman; at the funeral of a little child, a nephew, the poet sat near the white coffin, and held on his knee a beautiful little girl; she looked in childish wonder upon the paraphernalia of death, and then inquiringly gazed into the old man's face. "You don't know what it is, my dear, do you," said the poet gently; then he added reflectively:

"Nothing is known; but I believe That God is overhead. And as life is to the living, so death is to the dead." -Detroit Free Press.

Welland Canal Enlargement.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

EALED TENDERS addressed to the un-dersigned, and endorsed "Tender for the Wella Canal," will be received at this Office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western Mails on FRIDAY THE 1ST DAY OF SEPTEMBER next, for the deepening and completion of that part of the Welland Canal, between Ramey's Bend and Port Colborne, known as Section No. 34, embracing the greater part of what is called the "Rock Cut.

Plans showing the position of the work, and specifications for what remains to be done, can be seen at this Office, and at the Resident Engineer's Office, Welland, on and after FRIDAY, THE 18TH DAY OF AUGUST next, where printed forms of tender can be obtained.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and, in the case of firms, except there are attached the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the same; and further, an accepted bank cheque for the sum of four thousand dollars must accompany the respective housand dollars must accompany the respective tenders, which sum shall by forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the works, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque or money thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose Tenders are not accepted.

This Department does not, however, bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender. By order,

A. P. BRADLEY Secretary. JOSEPH BONAPARTE

HIS LIFE IN THIS COUNTRY-CURIOSITIES OF BONAPARTE PARK.

JOSEPH BONAPARTE was known in this country as the Count de Survelliers, taking his title from the name of one of his estates in France. It was in 1816 that he bought the property about Bordentown, N. J., one tract of which is now known as Bonaparte Park. Evidently he came to this country with full pockets. It is within the memory of living witnesses how he made the money fly during his fifteen or sixteen years' residence at Bordentown-the elegance of his furniture and surroundings, the abundance of costly wines, the splendor of the banquets he was constantly giving to distinguished personages, his fine equipages, his magnificent collection of costly pictures and statuary, the extensive improvements he made to his lands, and the large retinue of servants he always kept on hand, in addition to the extensive force of laborers he had constantly employed on his grounds.

The park alone contained about one thousand acres; in addition to this he had ten farms, all in the immediate neighborhood of Bordentown. He had a number of fine yachts and pleasure boats that always lay at anchor out on the Delaware, immediately underneath the bluff that marks the terminus of the north side of the park. Not content with his nearness to the river, he had a large and beautiful lake made in the lower end of his park, where in summer there was always on hand a number of small pleasure boats. In Winter, when the lake would freeze over, he would throw his gates open and invite the young folks of Bordentown to come in and skate. When the sport would be at its height, Joseph and his family would come down and amuse themselves by looking on. A favorite pastime of the ex-King on these occasions would be to roll oranges and coins down on the ice and watch the skaters scamper for them.

For a long time the only immediate member of Joseph Bonaparte's family who was with him in his exile was his daughter, Princess Zenaide, who married her cousin. Charles Bonaparte, a son of Lucien. A residence for this daughter and her husband was built on the lower end of the park, some hundred rods from the residence of Joseph himself. It is still standing as it was left by them. After several years, Joseph's second daughter joined her father and sister in America. His wife, Queen Julia, never did, however. Several times she undertook to set out to join him from Italy, where she was living, but ill-health invariably prevented—the physicians counselling her against it.

Joseph was a most popular man with people of all classes. In the winter his house was always thronged with guests. Among these were many of the most prominent men in the country of that day. Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Benton and many other shining lights in the political firmament were entertained by the ex-King at his Bordentown. home at different times. Henry Clay left a cane there, which is in the possession of one of the old inhabitants of Bordentown to this day. Nor was it only among the statesmen and wise men of the country Joseph Bona-parte found his companions. He was intimate with many of the old families up in New Jersey, as well as with Stephen Girard and all the people of prominence in Philadelphia. Before taking possession of his Bordentown property, Joseph had resided in Philadelphia, in a house on the west side of Ninth Street, between Spfuce and Locust. Afterward, with his daughter and her husband, he occupied one of Stephen Girard's houses, on the site of which the Bingham House now stands. It was here the Princess Zenaide's first child was born.

An amusing incident is related of Joseph and Stephen Girard. Joseph expressed a desire to purchase the ground between Eleventh and Twelfth and Chesnut and Market Streets, owned by Stephen Girard, and then unoccupied by buildings. At a dinner given by Girard to the ex-King one day, Joseph broached the subject, and offered to pay Girard any fair price he would

"What will you give?" said Girard. "I'll tell you," said Joseph. "I will cover the block from Eleventh to Twelfth and from Chestnut to Market Streets with silver half-dollars."

"Yes, Monsieur le Count," said Girard. after a moment's reflection-" if you will stand them up edgewise. The bargain was not close 1.

Of his manner of receiving and entertaining guests at Bonaparte Park much has been said, and many people are living to this day who were young then and who will always remember the occasion of their visit to Bonaparte.

Joseph's death in Italy, surrounded by his family, is a matter of history. Go to Bonaparte Park now, and you find all the evidences of its former splendor. Here are the crumbling brick walls of the underground passages. As to what these passages were for, there has been some diversity of opinion. Those most in position to know, however, will tell you that they were constructed by Joseph as so many avenues of escape in case of attempted assassina-tion. Of this he was more fearful than many of his chroniclers have dared to tell. His bedchamber was entered by a door moved by a secret spring. Outside this door it is said, a watchman was always stationed during the night. The underground passages ran from Joseph's house to the residence of his daughter, and also to the servants' quarters. In addition to these there was a long one running from the daugh-ter's house to the bluff overlooking the river, the entrance to which may still be seen, though the passage itself has fallen in in many places and filled up. There is no account of any attempt to explore the

The daughter's house is now unoccupied and closed. The ex-King's house has been razed to the ground, and in its stead a. handsome English villa stands, the builder of which was the subsequent owner of the park, Thomas Beckett, an Englishman.

It is said that Joseph always had a fleet of yachts lying out on the Delaware, available for him in case of surprise by the dreaded assassins whom he always fancied himself in danger of. The long under-ground passage leading to the river bluff is supposed to have been constructed by him as a means of reaching his boats in case of surprise. The place is full of interesting reminders of the ex-King's residence there. The forest which skirts the edge of the park has been planted with an eye to artistic effect and beauty. As a place of residence no more beautiful spot could be

When a man takes great pains to convince you that he is telling the truth, and that a man of his moral make-up is incapable of telling a lie, it is safe to conclude that his moral make-up has no influence on his present conversation. If one 'hardly ever" tells a lie you can trust most of his statements, but if he never, no never, tells a lie, don't believe a word he says about any subject. He is too awfully good to practice any of the ordinary virtues.

PUNCTIONAL HEART Troubles are commonly PUNCTIONAL HEART Troubles are commonly the outcome of impaired general health from deprayed nutrition, and are peculiar to nervous, irritable temperaments. Palipitation, intermitting, or irregular pulse, difficulty of breathing and head symptoms are reflex or sympathetic forms of stomach derangements, especially that form of dyspepsia with acidi y or heartburn, fistulence, irregularity of bowels, high-colored urine and brick dust deposit. Many of these cases have been entirely relieved by the prolonged use of WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA fortifying the nervous system and restoring the digestive apparatus to its normal activity.

• Up he goes; Up he goes!
Up where the wind whistles loud in its glee; Up where the robin shrisks gayly to see;
Where the sweet apple grows,
Up he goes! Up he goes!
Dance with the thistle down; buzz with the bee!

Boll a brown baby down deep in the flowers?

Down he goes! Down he goes!

Down where the butterflies flash in their bower;

Down where the rose petals pelt him in showers:

Where the soft passy grows,
Down he goes! Down he goes!

Honey beefood is this baby of ours.

Don't kill the toads, the ugly toads, that hop around your door. Each meal the toad doth eat a hundred bugs or more. He sits around with aspect meek until the bug is neared, then shoots he forth his little tongue like lightning double geared. And then he soberly doth wink, and shut his his ugly mug, and patiently doth wait until there comes another bug.

It has Stood the test of time.

For twenty-five years has Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry been before the people, and its popularity is to-day greater than ever, because it has proved reliable in the treatment of all forms of Bowel Complaint incident to the summer season. (24).

Scrofula is a deprayed condition of the system often hereditary, and characterized by indolent tumours, glandular affections, bad blood and a low condition of the vitality that tend towards consumption, which is really Scrofula of the Lungs. Burdock Blood Bitters cure Scrofulous diseases from a pimple to an abscess, by purifying the blood, correcting the secretions and giving a healthy tone to each organ.

The Dublin Review, the most intellectual periodical published in Ireland, and strongly representative of the Roman Catholic prehacy, says of the Land Corporation of Ireland, the association gotten up to fight the Land League: "It may be briefly said that its purpose is to buy up the land of Ireland, and then either to keep up the old impossible rents or to colonize Irelaud by loyal farmers from other countries. In the end it will no more exterminate Irishmen from the soil of Ireland than the ancestors of some of their landlords exterminated them in days gone by. It will add a hundred fold to the exasperation of the present conflict. It will unite every class of Irishmen (not landlords) by a sense of common danger. Nothing will better smooth out the divergence of opinion between Bishop and Bishop than this declaration of war. The watchword of the new League is 'the old rents or extermination."

Sixteen years ago a baby eleven months old was found in a street in Boston, dressed in costly clothes and wearing a locket on which the name "Charles Willoughby" was engraved. The child was adopted by a restaurant keeper of Hartford, Conn., and christened Charles Rogers. He grew up in ignorance of his origin, and the clues fornished by the articles worn by him when he was found led to no further discoveries. Recently he became a waiter in the Lawton House at Stone Bridge, Rhode Island, and worked there several months. Then he suddenly received a message from a dying man at Providence, who proved to be his grandfather, and was informed he had fallen heir to a large fortune. An unexplained mystery hangs about the history of the boy. It is said that his relatives have all along known of his whereabouts and -doings, but for reasons not stated did not make themselves known to him until the occurrence that has suddenly placed him in possession of ample wealth.

Dr. Cullis, a New England physician in regular standing, began eight years ago to pray for those patients whom his medicines did not cure. He was soon confirmed in a belief that miracles were wrought in numerour cases. He is now conducting a faith convention at Old Orchard Beach, Mc. Sick persons are present by the hundred to be prayed for, and some of them give wonderful testimony as to the results. Dr. Cullis reports that there are eighty people in different parts of the world engaged in praying for the sick and afflicted and effecting faith cures. The Rev. Dr. W. E. Berden, an American in London, has a large faith home. The Rev. Otto Stackmayer, at Harpwell, Switzerland, has one of the largest faith hospitals devoted wholly to miracles. Carl Andress, a Prussian preacher now in London, has a similar establishment. Ethan Allen, at Springfield, Mass., has prayed for the sick for over forty years, and is said to have accomplished wonderful cures. One of the most prominent faith concerns in the world is that of Samuel Zeller, at Nannadorf, Switzerland. It was founded by a Swiss named Dorothea Trendel. This institution was thoroughly examined by the German theologian, Theobuck, and by him proncunced wonderful.

The nearer we follow nature in the treatment of disease, the more successful we are. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is Nature's Specific for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic and all forms of summer complaints. It speedily cures Canker in the stomach or bowels, and is safe for infants as well as adults.

THE ACTION OF EARTHWORMS.

An article in Chambers's Journal deals with

tion of Vegetable Mould though the action of Worms." "The experiments," remarks the writer of the article, "to which Mr. Darwin subjected a number of worms, in order to discover the existence and development of their senses, are particularly interesting. To sound they are absolutely insensible; and not even Orpheus himself could have charmed them with his melodies ; for not only did they show the greatest indifference when subjected to the torture of a tin whistle, or the notes of a piano, but even the blast of a bassoon failed to make the slightest impression upon them. With regard to vibrations, however, they manifest extreme sensitiveness; for when the ground is beaten, they will instantly retreat; and if disturbed beneath them, they will quickly grawl out of their holes, probably under the impression that their enemy the mole is after them. This sensitiveness of the worm to vibrations, while unconscious of sounds, was proved by Mr. Darwin in a simple and effective manner. Though the tones of the piano did not affect them when separate from it, yet when the pots containing their burrows were placed on the piano itself, the moment any note was struck, the worms instantly disappeared within their burrows. They were thus shown to be sensible of the vibrations, though not of the sounds. Although destitute of eyes, earthworms are sensitive to intense light; and when the bull's eye of a lantern is directed upon the creature, it retreats instantly. Their sense of smell, on the other hand, is very limited and weak; for it has been ascertained that not even the odor of tobacco juice, or the strong perfume of millefleurs is sufficient to attract their attention; while pieces of cabbages, onions, and raw meat buried in flower pots near them did not remain long undiscovered. As already stated, they show a certain preference for particular kinds of food, preferring red cabbage to green, and celery and carrots before either.
Of all their senses, however, that of touch, including the perception of vibrations, appears to be the most highly developed. Regarding their digestive powers, we find they are omnivorous, and drag into their holes anything that appears at all edible, showing no particular objection even to such articles as rose-thorns or splinters of glass. The leaves which they get hold of they smear with an alkaline fluid, which partly digests them before they are actually introduced into the body; a fact remarkable as being the only instance recorded of any animal of digestion outside the stomach. But the earthworm does not altogether depend upon meat and leaves for its existence; it finds nourishment in the very soil. Its mouth consists simply of two lips; and it has no teeth, the particles of sand do not interfere with its mastication, so it goes on swallowing earth, which, in its passage through the intestines, has all the digestible ingredients thoroughly ex-tracted from it. The indigestible portions are then ejected in the form of little heaps called worm-casts, which every one who lives in the country or possesses a garden must be quite familar with. The fine earth brought up to the surface in these little heaps of worm excreta is afterward spread out by wind and rain more or less uniformly over the ground; the actual weight of these castings thrown up during twelve months being calculated in one case to amount to as much as eighteen and oneeighth tons per acre. Multiplying this by years, we can readily understand how surface objects will soon be covered up, or appear to sink into the ground; and numerous instances are given by Mr. Darwin of stones and walls and pavements which have thus been slowly undermined and sunk by worms. Thus we have at any rate one explanation of the hitherto mysterious fact, that the ruins of old cities have been found so far beneath the surface that the soil has been ploughed and reploughed for years without the least suspicion of the existence of the ancient monuments below. Mr. Darwin in this connection furnishes a number of striking illustrations of this burying or covering process in regard to fields which a number of years ago were thickly strewn with stones on the surface, and which stones in course of time entirely disappeared. A field near his own residence was ploughed in 1841, and afterward allowed to remain

We would take leave to suggest, however, that perhaps frost has also something to do with this sinking of stones, small and large, into the soil. We all know that frost acts very powerfully on the soil, raising the

THE following remedies were prescribed by Sir Theodore Mayern, the great doctor of the day, when the Princess Royal of England was going to cross to Belgium in 1642. Cinnamon, coriander, anise, ambergris, musk, and sugar were to be made into long tubes which she was to munch from time to time. She was to drink a warm posset should there be an excess of vomiting. A plaster made of the balsam of Peru, of gum mastich, and of laudanum, was to be applied to the pit of the stomach. She was also to smell the comforting vapors which arose from the following compound: Welltoasted bread, orange and citron-peel, roseleaves, flowers of lavender, and cloves, to be hashed up together. On this Canary wine, elder-flower vinegar, and cinnamon water were to be poured; portions to be successively applied to the nostrils. When she arrived on the other side she was to have an aromatic plaster applied to the stomach, and, what was more to the purpose, she was to have her stomach strengthened with burnt claret having in it a sprig of rosemary, some cinnamon, and sugar, or with a caudle of ale or small beer made with Canary wine, eggs, sugar and cinnamon! Such were the ways of comforting that distressed organ.

One marked feature about this treatment, although it was severe enough, is that the prescriptions were not so potent in polsonous matter as the mineral compounds of to-day .- Phrenological Jour-

With such an array of talent, there cannot but be an enjoyable evening. Go one, go all.

THE people and press of Peterboro' are habitually given to blowing. We notice in the last issue of the Examiner we find three highly self-enlogistic references. Peterboro', in the estimation of Peterboronians, is the hub of the universe, and if Peterboro' has anyone or anything who, or which, can beat anyone or anything else outside of Peterboro' the universe is quite sure to hear of it. But if anyone or anything belonging to Peterboro' gets beaten, the Peterboronians have a peculiarly wonderful and self-satisfactory way of accounting for it. So dense is the mist of egotism which is surrounding our sister town of the backwoods that in a few years its citizens will become e ntirely swamped in the tarn of their own conceit.

AGNES HERNDON is cousin to the former wife of President Arthur, springing from the Fredericksburg stock of Anna Herndon. She is known throughout the State as the beautiful Virginian as was her aunt before her. She is also cousin to the Hon. Charles P. She stars next season in "Only a Farmer's Daughter," and will wear the most elegant wardrobe ever seen on the American stage. We understand that the Union Theatre Company, with the above star, have been engaged at large expense, to play in Port Hope shortly.

A very large number of emigrants are now passing through. Several days ago we counted three trains of about twelve cars each following one another inside of an hour. On Monday, a small party of them stopped off at Port Hope about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. They had been engaged by Mr. Cavanagh, of Peterboro' to work on the Toronto and Ottawa. Their luggage was taken in charge of, and they were promised to be met at the station by an agent who would attend to their wants. But "none were there to greet" them, they could not get their luggage, they had no money, and the Midland Railway officials refused to pass them on to Peterboro'. About nine o'clock they found the chief constable, and grievously complained of their treatment to him. He sympathized with them, but was to offer them a bed in the cells-not very comfortable, but the best he had, and to which they were quite welcome. They were not disposed to take kindly to the suggestion, and our country, our emigration system, and particularly Mr. Cavanagh, were blessed with a blessing from the heart-one of those blessings an old coun-

Mr. W. R. Climie, of Bowmanville, Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, paid Port Hope a visit on Thursday last, on business connected with the Association. Great praise is due Mr. Climie for the pains he has tiken to complete all arrangements for the annual excursion (to Winnipeg), which starts from Toronto on Tuesday next.

We were pleased to meet our old friend Mr. W. B. Stanley, in town on Monday last, representing the Virginia Tobacco Co., a concern which is doing a very large trade in this Province, on account of the superiority of their goods. Mr. Stanley has splendid business abilities, and is sure to meet with success in any business with which he is connected.

We regret very much that Dr. Hunter, of Perrytown, has been obliged through Illness, to relinquish his practice in that place. He is to be succeeded, we understand, by Dr. Gilmour, of Manitoba mud notoriety-a gentleman who formerly attended to the medical wants of the village.

Miss McLean, formerly well known in Port Hope, visited our town this week. Miss M. is an authores; and was here arranging for the sale of her book entitled "True Anecdotes of Pet Animals." The incidents related are all in the authoress own experience, and form a very charming series of tales. All the illustrations are designed by Miss McLean herself.

PREACHERS AND POPULAR EVILS.

On Sunday evening Rev. A. P. McDiarmid

delivered himself of one of his characteristically trenchant discourses. His subject was:

The daty of ministers in connection with the popular evils, and his text embraced a number of passages from Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Jonah, Matthew, the Acts of the Apostles, Romans, etc. He asked the question: Is it within the province of ministers to deal with public evils? Their existence none could deny, and could be defined as that, which to a greater or less extent, had an immoral, pernicious effect on the public morals. He thought it was not only the duty of a preacher, to deal with such questions, but in a specific way. Neither high nor low should be spared. God had commissioned his watchmen on the tower to warn the people and there was a terrible responsibility resting on their shoulders. He was determined to do his duty and the introduction of "personalities" would not deter him in carrying it out. Some thought that ministers should not preach about evils, except thos far off. Denounce the iniquity of the Jews the waywardness of Arabi Bey, or the sins of eighteen hundred years ago, but anything of local nature or persons of local importance must not be referred to for fear of offending. This feeling had always existed. There had always been those who would dictate what should be preached; martyrs suffered because they would not be muzzled in the expression of opinions. There were these people still who, although they cannot legally restrict pulpit utterances, would harass preachers as much as possible. He had been lectured by a gentleman of this town about two weeks ago, because of his statements from the pulpit. He was told they were not in accordance with the enlarged views of the age. Enlarged views, indeed! Such views were pretty conaiderably enlarged when they would admit of the town park being used as a race course, and the people's money voted as a guarantee fund in getting up horse races, dancing, etc.; when a billiard room could be running three months without any license whatever and the authorities know nothing of it. In preaching he knew nothing of such principles and would speak out his mind freely and above board. He had also been told he should be guided by "expediency." Here the rev. gentleman duoted from the TIMES: "Expediency, according to Paul, is a very potent element in advancing the cause of Christianity." He admitted that the apostle spoke of expediency, but in a different sense. To the demands of modern expediency as a right means of advancing Christianity he gave an unqualified negative. To impute such motives to him was an outrage upon Paul. A great many think that a sermon should be a sort of essay, interlarded with rhetoric and nicely rounded periods-an intellectual treat-something to please the people and suit popular ideas. Sermons like these degrade the pulpit to the level of the stage, because that is the object of the stageto please. Another class of people thought that preachers should talk peace and good will to men-a kind of goody-good talk. There was too much of this preaching altogether. Writers tell us that the pulpit is losing its power. If it is, it is because ministers preach too much peace and good will and not enough about the evils of the day. Christ did not come into the world to preach peace, but, as he tells us, to bring a word. Mr. McDiarmid expatiated to som length on the ideas we have presented in synopsis, and concluded by hoping it would be unnecessary to refer to his position with reference to popular evils again. He had denounced evils from the standpoint of duty and right, and he would continue to do so.

"CAUGHT ON THE FLY."

"When a journal descends to the level of opening its editorial columns, as the TIMES has done, to the effusions of every T. D. and H. who has a personal pique at the Mayor, to veut their spleen, it has fallen low indeed. The contributions inspired by jealousy are too easily recognized." So says the smallest of our two contemporaries. It is not the first time the same journal has said with brazen faced impudence that the TIMES editorials were contributed. The statement that this journal had descended to the lowest possible scale in journalism because it allowed private parties to vent their spleen editorially, and that these contributions were "inspired by jealousy," can have no better refutation than the fact that our editorials are not contributed by any person outside of the regular staff connected with the TIMES. Our contemporary if he thinks "the contributions are too easily recognized" can have a respectable looking hat and a time-piece by naming the "too easily recognized" T. D. and H. who contributed them. The journal which states as a fact what it knows nothing about is in a more ignominious position even than the one which allows every T. D. and H. to scribble

That is news to us, but then the paper which made the statement is noted for furnishing its readers with news, new to all but itself. A CITIZEN COMPLIMENTED.

One of our citizens who rejoices in his municipal honors when abroad, enjoyed a distinguished compliment while attending the Midland sale of lots at Midland the other day. At dinner-table an American lady nudged a friend and pointed to this individual asked:

"Who is that ?"

"Oh," was the reply "that's Mr. -- of Port Hope.

"Indeed," said the lady. "Do you know, if Guiteau wasn't dead, and I knew it, I would swear that was him."

Those around the table laughed heartily, and after dinner the joke was passed round the Port Hope crowd, who, with one exception, enjoyed it immensely. Theof Port Hope thought it was a "put up" affair, and wagered the lemonade for all hands that that lady never said he looked like Guiteau. The lady not only re-confirmed her belief in the similarity of countenances, but offered to produce a picture of the scaffold scene just before the black cap was put on, so that they could satisfy themselves. The latter was not required; the wager was liquidated, and a solemn agreement entered into, sealed by more lemonade, that this joke should not come to the ears of the Times. Several of the party excused themselves on the score that lemonade is not strong enough to make a pledge Oswego, Aug. 12, 1882. The barley harvest is now so near completion, we can salely form opinions as to quantity, and with approximate accuracy of quality.

Taking the production of the who'e barley-growing region together, there can be no question of the abundance of the yield.

It is generally believed that there will be more barley marketed from the crep of 1882, than in any previous year. Add to this the fact that the quality s uniformally good, we find much to warrant the expectation that dealers will have a satisfactory fall expectation that dealers will have a satisfactory fall business. This calmot but prove to be so if those who buy barley will move with reasonable caution. If barley is bought from farmers on the basis of facts to gauge its value, the trade will be steady and healthy, as there is every probability that at moderate pieces, malsters will buy freely. We incline to the opinion that buyers in this region will have better opportunity to purchase at fair values than they had last year. We express this opinion because there is less likelihood of the same active western demand in Canada markets that was felt all through the season of 1881. We might note, too, that the the season of 1881. We might note, too, that the barley in this State was never better than it is this barley in this State was never better than it is this year, and it promises to move early. This will help considerably to fill up the first requirements of malsters. We hear of sales of several boat loads of barley in New York, guaranted to inspect one Canada, Oswego inspection, at $1.00 for first half and all October delivery. Our advices to-day indicate less disposition to buy at this price. Sales of the same grade have been made in this market at 93c, for delivery by October 3rd but at this writing there same grade have been made in this market at 93c. for delivery by October 3rd but at this writing there
