DOUBT VALUE OF NEW VERSION

Of More Interest to Scientists Than to Theologians, Says Prof. Currelly

Toronto authorities on the scriptures and their origin, are not very much excited about the report of the discovery of two wholly new versions of the story of the crucifixion. Prof. C. T. Currelly, when spoken to at his summer home at Canton near Port Hope, believed they might be authentic, as they were discovered by Dr. Alphonse Mingana, librarian of the John Rylands library in Manchester. He remarked: "It is probable that the new versions are something new if it is issued by the Rylands library. The Rylands scholars are very reliable, and anything which comes from them is usually all right."

"The question is, did the versions discovered come from the Rylands library people? If so, it is probably a correct report. I do not think the discovery is of very great importance to theologians, but it is very interesting to scientific men. The Gospel according to St. Peter, discovered in 1884, and mentioned in the report, is of no very great consequence."

Rev. W. A. Potter, professor of religious knowledge at Victoria College, remarked: "I have never heard of these documents before and a complete investigation into the subject would be necessary before I would be convinced it was correct. Especially if it comes from a Jewish source it will need to be sifted. We have had many hoaxes perpetrated in the past."

NO ANXIETY RE HARVEST HELP

7,500 Men Expected From Britain and 6,000 From United States

There is no anxiety in Federal circles over the problem of providing the 18,000 additional men required to harvest the year's record crop in western Canada. From advices received by Government officials it is believed that of that total additional number at least 8000 can be secured within the Dominion; there is expectation of an influx of 6000 harvesters from the United States, as compared with 2000 last year, and it is not anticipated that the proposed movement of migrants from Great Britain for temporary employment as harvesters in Canada this season will exceed 7500.

As a result of the conferences between the Dept. of Immigration and Colonization, representatives of the colonization branches of the Canadian railways and officials of the steamship lines, it has become apparent that the whole responsibility for the suggestions that 10,000 harvesters be brought out from the British Isles this season lies with the British authorities, and by the same token the Canadian officials refuse to assume any responsibility in the matter, beyond the assurance of the Department of Immigration that it will co-operate to the full in helping to find permanent placement for as many as possible of those who come out to assist in the harvest.

It is understood that the proposal of the British Government is that the steamship companies give the harvesters a through outward rate of £12, which, it is believed, has been agreed to and that for the return trip the harvesters themselves put up £6 and the remainder of the fare be provided by loans from the British Government. The request that the Canadian railways and other transportation companies undertake to get the men back to Britain was declined, so that the entire responsibility for the actual movement of the men rests with the British authorities.

IMMIGRATION FIGURES UP

Majority of Settlers Are of British and U. S. Origin

Immigration to Canada for June amounted to 20,303 as compared with 18,052 for June a year ago, an increase of 12 per cent., according to a statement made public yesterday by the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

For the three months, April, May and June, immigration amounted to 70,927. The principal sources have been: British 23,695, and United States 9343. Belgium had contributed 638, Denmark 1817, Holland 849, Finland 1201, France 272, Germany 5812, Norway 1092, Sweden 1554, Switzerland 229 and other countries 24,405.

Of immigration from the United States for the three months, Michigan contributed the largest quota, with 1505, followed by New York, Washington, Massachusetts and California, in the order stated. During June 3526 Canadians who have gone to the United States intending to live there permanently, returned to Canada, declaring their intention of remaining in this country.

WESTERN CROPS AND TOWN HIT

One of Worst Storms in Kincaid Causes Heavy Loss on Farms and Buildings

The worst hail and wind storm experienced in the history of the district swept over Kincaid, Sask., on Monday evening, leaving behind a trail of desolation and broken windows.

Promising crops for miles around were laid low just as though a mowing machine had gone over them, and gardens were pounded to pulp by the hail which fell for about 15 minutes.

A terrific wind storm of almost cyclonic proportions preceded the hail, tore the roof off the public school and shattered part of the walls.

The Main Street is covered with debris torn from the surrounding buildings by the cyclonic wind and the windows in virtually every residence in town were broken by the hail.

POULTRY SHOW BEING MOOTED

Meeting to Create Interest in Poultry Business to be Held Shortly

Inasmuch as Port Hope is one of the chief poultry centres in Ontario, it is felt that a larger poultry show should be held here in connection with the Fall Fair, or else a separate Poultry Show should be held. It is felt that the time is now opportune to interest many of the young men and boys of the town in poultry raising, not only from a commercial standpoint, but also from the poultry fancier's standpoint. It is to be hoped that everyone in this community interested in poultry will be present at a meeting to be held in the Department of Agriculture, Ontario Street Thursday evening, Aug. 2nd.

HEAVY CHAMP, QUITS THE RING

Sees no Worthy Contender in View, He Declares

Gene Tunney, heavyweight champion boxer, announced his retirement from the ring, at a luncheon given in honor of William Muldoon, 82 year old member of the New York State Athletic Commission.

"I have fought my last bout as a professional boxer," his statement said.

Staging a "farewell party" to the commissioner and more than 50 newspapermen guests, Tunney declared definitely that the time had come to step out of the game that made him a millionaire. Reports that Tunney was to retire had been circulated since he crushed Tom Heeney in an eleven-round technical knockout at the Yankee Stadium last Thursday night.

"Feeling that I am still young enough to make another start in a new field," Tunney declared himself "grateful for the benefits conferred," and "anxious to leave the game better than I found it."

"There is no contender at the present time who appears capable of attracting real public interest. If there were I might delay my retirement long enough to face them in the ring, but it looks as if it might be two or three years before a dangerous opponent is developed. This is too long to stand and wait."

Tunney declared it his desire to place in Rickard's hands "a belt or other suitable emblem of supremacy, to be awarded by him to that boxer who, through a series of elimination bouts or victories over the most formidable opponents that can be obtained shall prove himself deserving of it."

Gene made no definite mention of his future plans, and paid no attention in his statements to rumors that he was about to enter matrimony.

In ending his statement, he said: "I have no thought of trying to nominate my successor. To the victor belongs the spoils. I merely step aside and say 'may the best man win.'"

FOOLISH NOTIONS

The American tourist who arrived in Hamilton in search of winter sports on a sabbath day is reported to have shipped his skis, toboggan and snowshoes from Quebec back to his home in Georgia. He has found a Canadian July quite equal to the same time of year in his native state.

Ontario residents have had a good The Southern tourist. Ever some of the Southern papers have given him the merry ha-ha. But while the mistaken traveller can hardly be considered as representative of the majority of his countrymen, there is nevertheless a very good proportion of United States citizens whose ideas of Canada are quite as hazy as those of the man from Georgia.

Large numbers of Americans, especially those at a considerable distance from the borderline, have an idea that Canada is a land of perpetual snow, that nothing but moss and lichen grows above the very definite line drawn between the two countries in the American geography books. Much of this is due no doubt to the pictorialization of the movies. A movie play in which the scenes are supposed to be laid in Canada is almost certain to abound in vast snowy wastes, log cabins, mounted police and dogsleds. No wonder that a large number of American tourists expect to find summer sport in skiing or tobogganing off the Hamilton mountain.

The tremendous increase in the number of tourists from the other side will do more to correct this false impression of Canada than any other movement. Thousands of Americans will return to their homes with a more accurate appreciation of the Dominion and of climatic conditions.—Kitchener Record.

FILE LENGTHEN SOFTBALL LEAD

Defeat Ganeraskas in Snappy Fixture 9-2 at Viaduct Park

The Ganeraskas put up a real good exhibition of softball at Viaduct Park Tuesday evening in a scheduled fixture with the Nicholson File but met with the eleventh straight reverse and the File lengthened their lead by one full game. Buck Tweed's gang won 9 to 2.

Barring the fifth frame when the winners counted five runs on five hits a walk and two errors, the tilt was interesting from a spectator's point of view. The File went into an early lead and bagged two in the first session and added another one in the second and third innings.

In the second innings the losers scored their first run. Bruce drew a walk and Rowcliffe singled to left field. Palmer hit to centre filling the bases. Lowe drew a walk forcing in a run but Berbert knocked into a double play. Again the Ganeraskas filled the bases in the third but were unable to score more than one run. Buckley doubled to right field and Bruce was safe when Winters dropped Welch's throw, and Buckley counted on the play. Goodman walked and Rowcliffe again singled but Palmer bounced to short, nipping a promising rally in the bud. After the third innings, the Ganeraskas were held hitless and runless.

Nelson allowed only five hits and he issued three walks. Three batsmen fell victims to his southpaw slants. The winners accumulated fourteen hits with Tweed securing three in four attempts and Trawin, Ware, Foote and Wallace two apiece.

Three snappy double plays added some excitement to the fixture and two were made by the File and one by the opposition. In the fifth frame, Clement made a spectacular running catch of Winters' drive to left field and doubled Trawin off 3rd base.

The teams:
Ganeraskas—Berbert p; Clements ss; Buckley 1st; Goss 2nd; Bruce 3rd; Goodman lf and rf; Rowcliffe cf; Palmer of and lf; Lowe rf and cf.
File—Welch ss; Trawin rf; Ware lf; Tweed 2nd; Winters 1st; Wakely c; Foote ss; Nelson p; and Wallace cf.

STRANGE PEOPLE UNKNOWN ASSAM

Italians Give Explorer a Hearty Welcome—Mussolini Leads In General Enthusiasm

There is probably no part of the British Empire which contains so much of interest and of which so little is generally known as Assam. It is situated at the northeast corner of India, and consists of the valleys of the Brahmaputra and the Surma with the intervening range of hills.

Though the smallest of the Indian major provinces, it has an area about equal to that of England and Wales. To the north and east its boundaries are not defined, but stretch as far as the frontier officers can make their writs run without recourse to force in the tumbled mass of mountains which lies between the Brahmaputra valley and Tibet and China, writes B. C. Allen in the London Times.

In this part of the world there have been no advocates of a forward policy. The country could never pay the cost of administration, and, for so long as the hillmen leave the plains in peace, they are left by Government to their own devices. When raids to be punished it is a difficult and expensive business. Coolies are the only possible form of transport along the rough tracks that creep up the river gorges, and in the dense forest a bow and a poisoned arrow are almost as effective a weapon as a rifle. And so, though these mountains and rivers are of the greatest beauty, and though they have been so little explored that they still possess the lure of the unknown, Government wisely prefers to leave them to their wild inhabitants.

Tree Dwellers

The range of mountains between the two valleys is the home of tribes which are of the greatest interest to the ethnologist. In the west are the Garos, who live in tiny hamlets in jungle covered hills where elephants and man-eating tigers are so numerous that men have taken to sleeping like birds in trees. They have huts on the ground which they occupy during the day, but at night they mount into little houses of bamboo built in the branches of a tree stout enough to resist the attacks of a wild elephant. Those who have seen in the film "Chang" will appreciate the advantages of the custom.

In the centre come the Khasis, who still adhere to the patriarchal system. A mere male has no independent economic existence. Before his marriage he earns for his mother, after marriage he earns for his wife, and if, as sometimes happens, she divorces him, she keeps all the property acquired during their union. Inheritance goes through the female and, though men rule the little communities into which the tribe is divided, they are succeeded by their sisters' sons. It is as their mother's and not as their father's representative that they have reached the headship of the State, and their own sons have no claim to succeed, since they are members of their mother's family and are in no way affected by the position of their father.

In one section of the tribe husbands and wives continue to live each in the old home, even after marriage; there is no common married life, and the husband is simply an instrument for the transmission of life to the next generation. But though their family customs are the exact opposite to those which prevail in other parts of the world, the women are not harsh viragos nor the men poor, weakly parasites. On the contrary, both men and women are a cheery, vigorous, independent lot, and the children are almost as attractive as the children of Japan.

Shillong, the capital of the province, has been built on the rolling downs on which this tribe lives, and the Khasis have grown prosperous on the money which the Government spends in the district and on the lime quarries and orange groves which are found on the southern slope of their hills. Their country boasts not only the provincial capital, one of the most delightful stations in India, but also Cherra Punji, which has the highest recorded rainfall in the world. The average annual fall is about 460 in; the "record" is over 500 in.

To the east are the mountains of the Nagas a collection of tribes, loved by all who live among them, whose sole failing in an otherwise charming disposition is a strong desire to collect human heads. Frontier officers accept no such plea as an irresistible impulse, and within the British border the desire is held in check. Beyond it every village is fortified against its neighbor and men have a hunted look. Ultimately Assam will probably join Burma in swallowing the Naga hills, but we advance slowly, as administration is costly and the wild men have learnt to respect our frontier and our subjects.

We should never have entered their hills had they been content to leave us in peace. But when we did withdraw in 1851 there were such perpetual raids and forays that we were forced to go back again and farther in. Even then it cost the lives of three district officers before the Nagas learnt their lesson. On the north bank of the Brahmaputra we were able to maintain a policy of wait and see. To the south a forward policy was forced upon us.

South of the Surma valley live the Lushais, a tribe which has taken wonderfully to Christianity and education, though it, too, had to be bought for a price. Between the Lushais and the Nagas lies the interesting little State of Manipur, which found itself famous 35 years ago as the result of her beheading of the Chief Commissioner of Assam with three members of his staff.

A combination of circumstances has converted the province into a second Tower of Babel. The tribes are derived from different racial stocks, and the difficulties of communication in the hills and the unfriendly habits of the Nagas led to the growth and perpetuation of different languages. There are valleys in the hills where the villagers on one side cannot understand the speech of the villagers on the other. And to the various tribal tongues are added the languages of the coolies, who come to the tea gardens from almost every part of India.

As a result, 101 different languages are spoken among a population of a little over 8,000,000 persons, a fact that hardly makes for unity. And languages are here found in the making. Many of the laborers use what is known as coolie bat, which is compounded party of debased Assamese and Hindustani and partly of their own tribal dialects, so that it cannot really be classified under any recognized family of speech.

Tea Growing

But Assam is something more than a linguistic or ethnological museum. More than a century ago tea was discovered growing wild in its forests, and, when Government was satisfied that the tree was the true tea of commerce, it set up a factory for the treatment of leaf plucked from the wild trees, and planted seed obtained from China. In 1840 the estate was sold to the Assam Company, which had been founded the year before with a capital of half a million. For the first ten years of its existence it did badly, and small wonder. It must have been at least a six weeks' journey from this company's gardens to Calcutta, and supplies, labor, markets were all hard to get. But the tide soon turned, and the company has since enjoyed a long period of remarkable prosperity. It was the forerunner of many similar undertakings, and there are now in Assam 420,000 acres which yield over 240,000,000 lbs. of tea. The bungalows of the planters, dotted about the valley, with their tennis courts, their golf links, and their polo grounds, have converted much of Assam into something more like a British colony than a part of the Indian Empire.

THE GUIDE STORY

Louis Brutone was walking dreamily along the midnight streets of the great city, when suddenly there was a roaring sound in the air, a trampling of feet, a rolling of wheels, a shouting of voices—all the wild clamor of a tempestuous and excited crowd.

His mind was so filled with the horrible threats and denunciations of the president against the existing order of things, that he was for a moment inclined to believe Paris had suddenly seized an opportunity for revolt, and that soon the streets would be painted red with murder, while ruin, chaos, and death threatened the city.

He thought, as a lever would think, of Vesta Llewellyn. Where was she? Let him seek her and save her, or die by her side.

And then in another moment the whole situation was made plain and palpable before him. This was not a revolution, but a fire. The Theater Bellevue, a new one, opened only the night before, was in flames.

It was very late; the performance of a new burlesque and ballet had been much prolonged, and the theater had been so enormously crowded that the most horrible danger threatened the hapless mass of humanity who were struggling to escape from the burning building.

The fire-engines were only now driving madly toward the awful scene, and these were not sufficient for the occasion.

Louis Brutone rushed desperately with the crowd toward the narrow street where the tall new theater had opened in brilliant and dashing Parisian style only the night before. He had not an atom of fear.

Life looked hopeless and gloomy to him just then, despite his youth, strength, and talents. A terrible crime was demanded of him by an inexorable, pitiless spot, whose slave he was. He was poor, struggling, insanely in love with a girl above him in rank, who, he believed, despised him. He was nameless, friendless, linked in with a ruffianly scheme which his soul detested; so let him try to save some of those wretched men, women, and children within the walls of the burning Bellevue.

Turning a sharp corner, he found himself facing the long building five stories in height. Flames were flaring from every window; women in the crowded street were filling the air with their maddened voices, shrieking out that husband or lover, brother or children, were being roasted to cinders within the theater.

The engines played weakly and with insufficient force against that house of death, which held a strange gift for the young violinist even then, amid the raging of those terrific flames, wherein nothing that was human could live—no, not for five minutes of mortal time!

CHAPTER XV.

Man, woman, child, or helpless dumb animal must each have been reduced to a charred, indistinguishable mass in less than twice five minutes, if left a prey to those devouring flames, which were fast reducing the once brilliant theater to a heap of hideous ruins.

The engines played weakly; the fire roared and devoured with the strength and power of a Titan; the crowd in the street increased in number and in noise.

Louis Brutone could never, then nor afterward, understand what was the magnetic force which urged him toward the burning pile. He had some wild fear that Vesta was perishing, or had perished in that fatal fire; but he knew that it was not likely Mrs. Vaughan would have taken her daughter and another young school-girl to see a burlesque which was said not to be at all remarkable for refinement, however clever and graceful the performer might be, however splendid the theater itself, and the dresses and diamonds of the principal performers.

Vesta was not there, but something there was within Louis' consciousness which almost drove him toward the terrible fire.

It was ascertained that the top-most stories of the Bellevue were as yet untouched by the actual flames, and it was suggested that there was a possibility some persons might have found their way there, and might still be living.

The fire-escape was raised, and Louis Brutone, who had placed a mask—which he always had about him—on his face, rushed forward and insisted on climbing up the escape-ladder—up, up—past the flames which were raging on each side of him. Unseen, as if he had borne a charmed life, he reached an open window.

In darkness, and a horrible smell of smoke and burning, he struck a match, and then saw in a flash the livid face of a man fixed in death—a roughly clad man, as it seemed, lying huddled up against the wall.

Puff Collars Replace The Flattery Of Fur For Evening

There is something very appealing about Anne in her new spring evening wrap. So completely enveloped in a cloak that sheds an air of mystery and charm, she cannot fail to impress her vividness, good taste and sense of smartness on those about her. Whether in a box at the opera or at the entrance to a gay ballroom, her evening coat of moiré fits the occasion perfectly. The flattery of fur about the face is replaced by a puff collar corded at intervals. The smart lines and wide corded steers give further proof that this young lady has full knowledge of all that is new in evening wear. Even the shade—eggshell or a pale beige—is the newest color favored by French designers and is particularly becoming to a dark type. (Copyright, 1928, by Butterick)

The starter tried to shout, but up went Brown—a car came down, and Mrs. Brown stepped out!

The starter shook with hidden mirth. He didn't dare display; "Your husband, mum, went back, he said, "But crossed you on the way; Just take a chair and rest awhile, He'll surely come right down," She wouldn't listen—up she went—While down came Mr. Brown.

He went back up—his wife came down, and headed for the door, While Brown ransacked in wild despair, The twenty-second floor; As out into the street she passed, With proud, uplifted chin, "I hope they'll meet in Heaven," Said the starter, with a grin.

CUT SOW THISTLE NOW!

A little attention immediately to cutting Sow Thistle will prevent millions of seeds being scattered over your farm and your neighbor's farm.

Sow Thistle is one of the most pernicious weeds in the Province. It has been on the increase. Further increase means the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Get it under control now before it gets your farm under control.

HIGHER STANDARDS

When one reads of the unemployment conditions in Britain and of the distress prevailing in other European countries, on account of postwar economic problems, one is apt to imagine that the status of the working classes is worse now than it ever has been. But such is not the case. According to a survey conducted by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, the standard of living among the wage-earners of Europe is higher than before the war, and it is stated that the improvement is due not to the war, but that it came about in spite of it. Among the causes for this betterment are better business methods, increased technical skill, mass production and scientific management. "This is tantamount to saying that labor has been profiting by an increase in the social product—a claim which responsible labor and socialist leaders do not deny, though they stress other factors," comments the New York Times. As for the unemployed, they have their social insurance schemes to fall back upon, and in this respect are certainly better off than formerly. There are, too, the old age pensions provisions, the sickness and accident benefits, etc. Apart from these financial advantages, there are improved working conditions, shorter hours, better homes, higher education, and greatly increased facilities for acquiring what used to be classed as luxuries but are now placed in the category of necessities.

This undoubted improvement makes it hard for the reds to get converts among level-headed workers. According to Karl Marx, as the more extreme of his followers interpret him, capitalism meant the enslavement of the masses and a progressive deterioration of the status of the workers. But in the sixty years which have elapsed since these theories were first propounded, a reverse process has been in evidence; the workers have immensely improved their position and it has been found that it is not by the antagonism of labor and capital, but through their co-operation, that mutual interests are served. That is why a spirit of moderation has come into the British Labor party and men like Cook are discredited. It is impossible to create enthusiasm for a system which has been tried and failed. Let Emma Goldman, the communist, who lived for two years under communism and found it far worse than any other form of government she had experienced, speak to the completeness of the failure in Russia. On the other hand, there is the so-called capitalist system, which has led to this acknowledged and very obvious improvement in the condition of all classes of society. That there is room for still further improvement no one denies; the workers are taking the wise course of assisting rather than hindering this work of betterment. — Hamilton Spectator.

THE HIGHWAYS OF BUYING

"Follow the highway markings and you can't go wrong." That's the advice the Automobile Club gives you before starting on a motor trip. You follow the well-known, well-marked roads. And you reach your destination the safest, most comfortable way.

Why not follow the same rule in your shopping? Why not stick to the "highways of buying?" They have been just as carefully plotted and are just as carefully marked as the great motor roads you've come to depend on. Marked by the trade-marks of reliable, advertised products.

The next time you go shopping follow these "highways." Before you start, look through the advertisements in these columns. Pick out the products you want. Notice the names and trade marks that identify them. And then ask for them by name.

The advertisements are the sign-posts to guide you to the best merchandise.

Leafs Lead Reduced

Failure to take advantage of a golden opportunity to produce some runs in the first inning and a deplorable lack of hitting throughout cost the Toronto Leafs the second game of the series with Montreal at Leaf Stadium yesterday. The Leafs again demonstrated that three of a kind will beat a small pair any day in the week, and, like on Monday, they overcame Toronto's early lead and handed the O'Hara help another 3 to 2 beating.

Cobb Rests Again

Averages slip downward all along the Big Six line yesterday, except in the case of Ty Cobb, who again remained on the sidelines as his team cleared up the Browns for the fourth straight afternoon. The relative standing of Rogers Hornsby and P. Waner, remained unchanged as each slipped back two points, permitting the Boston manager to retain his 16 point advantage over the Pittsburgh phenomenon.

Babe Ruth failed to get a home run, but he cut in with a useful double as the Yankees limped home to a victory over the Indians. The Babe remained in the first division of the Big Six as Frisch could do nothing, while his mates were mauling Philadelphia pitchers for 20 hits.

THE AUSTRALIAN SCORED

The Scot was talking to an Australian who was on a visit to Scotland.

"I tell ye," said Sandy, "what I observed when I was over in Melbourne and other towns in yer country. Wherever I went I found Scotsmen occupying all the high positions, heads of business, heads of departments, managing banks, owning the biggest sheep stations, and filling the chief places in the Government services. I'm telling ye, the Scot is most everywhere in Australia."

NOBILE REACHES HIS HOME LAND

Hillmen Left to Own Devices as Long as Peaceful

General Umberto Nobile and the surviving members of the ill-fated dirigible Italia came back to Italy Tuesday to be greeted enthusiastically by their countrymen seeking to show unbounded confidence in them despite criticism in many parts of Europe.

Premier Mussolini symbolized the feeling of the Italian people in the matter of being the first to extend greetings to the returning men at the very threshold of the mother country, personally sending the prefect of Bolzano to the Brenner Pass to welcome them in the name of "Fascist Italy."

As the train transporting Nobile and his men advanced southwards the enthusiasm increased steadily. Trento made a patriotic demonstration. Verona solemnly received them, and Bologna gave them a frantic ovation.

HEARD ON THE STREET

Wouldn't that beat the Dutch again this year a wet down for the day of the big Masonic picnic?

Fortunately the rain did not last long today so many are travelling east from here.

Men are at work on the campus of Trinity College School leveling up a few hollows where the water has gathered after rains.

This is the afternoon that there'll only be about three on the main street.

Again attracting a very large audience to the Royal Theatre last night, "Ramona" repeated the tremendous hit it made on Monday. If you have not yet seen this delightful photoplay, you certainly should do so tonight, when the engagement closes. It is just about the finest romantic drama ever seen here, and the action of the management in showing it at regular prices is much appreciated.

Following the trial which was held at Harmony Monday night in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Mackie, where Leonard Ford was charged with negligent driving, causing bodily injury to their sons, Harold and Murrel Mackie, Magistrate Hind, in Oshawa police court found Ford guilty of the offense, and placed him under suspended sentence for the rest of his life, with a recognizance of $500.

As usual the demand for farm laborers in this district for the harvest season is much greater than the supply, with not many applicants offering. The continued wet weather, making it impossible to get the hay under cover, and which has beaten down the fall wheat and rye, has added to the work on most of the farms. Weeds and more weeds in the hoe crop have also required extra attention.

The Department of Agriculture is notifying farmers of this district to cut the sow-thistles now and prevent the spread of this great weed pest.

The recent Union Derby from California to New York had nothing on the recent hike from Cobourg to Port Hope by one of Garnett's Construction Softball team. It was reported that he was in training for the C. N. E. marathon swim but after an interview declared this was not the case but that he was merely getting into condition for the exhibition softball game with the Bankers Friday night. It was further ascertained that three love sick romances were wooing the ladies of their affection in the eastern metropolis and as the other two gallant swains rode home on the cushions, our friend was left in the launch, excuse me lurch, and was forced to use his Dacks via Walker's express to reach home to the arms of Father Morpheus and the folds of his virtuous couch. It is reported that he did the hike in one hour and thirty minutes and forty seconds flat. Of course, on his nocturnal journey home his mutterings and remarks were not very complimentary. Although they were unfit for this column, nevertheless they were "HEARD ON THE STREET."

Quite a number of Port Hoppers' were in Cobourg last night for the circus or old time dance in their pavilion for which Doney's orchestra? To many who have seen big circuses it was a disappointment, but we heard several children who were delighted with it. They no doubt knew not the cost nor did they expect too much.

The Peterboro Plowmen's Association has decided to hold their annual plowing match on the farm of Allen Payne, adjacent to the village of Warsaw. The date selected is Oct. 17 and prospects are strong for more competitors than ever before. The association President is J. J. Duffus of Peterboro. It is expected that Peterboro County will be represented also at the Provincial meet, which is to be held near London in Ontario.

In a short, but fierce, electrical storm which passed over Downeyville, six miles east of Lindsay, five valuable Holstein cows were killed. There were six in the field, only one being saved.

"Ya'as, I said you had the best cattle an' sheep of any farmer I knowed. An' what was more, I said that pair o' hosses o' yours was the finest in Franklin County—wuth at least $800."

"Who'd you say it to?" queried the flattered foe.

"The tax assessor."
