

THE GUIDE STORY

"Yes; I think so," Lord Dacre was expected to marry a fortune for the sake of the estates and the prosperity of the family generally. How was it that he found himself wishing—yes, wishing distinctly—that yonder April (he had heard her mother call her April) might turn out a great heiress? Merchants often realized huge fortunes.

"She is supremely lovely!" said Lord Dacre, absently, as if to himself.

Brutone had been looking with longing eyes of a lover after the departing wheels of Mrs. Vaughan's elegantly lined carriage.

Louis colored hotly; a fierce light shone in his eyes—the light of an angry and jealous love. He thought Lord Dacre meant Vesta.

"To some men," he said, with all the pent-up fire of his tropical nature flaming upon the fortunate son of the "classes"—"to some men all the prizes of life fall without their raising their hands to receive them. It must make one blasphemous to be born a lord."

"Why, in the name of the seven wonders of the world, my dear Monsieur Brutone?"

The young men had both taken leave of the ladies upstairs, and now the men-servants of the house brought them their overcoats, and asked their orders respecting vehicles, for the sleet had turned to a desperate drenching rain.

"I have a cab waiting for me under cover close by," said Lord Dacre, looking at his watch. "The man will be here in five minutes. If you haven't taken care of yourself, Monsieur Brutone, shall I offer you a seat and put you down anywhere?"

Before Louis could thank Lord Dacre, or accept the offer, another person had joined the two young men. This was Mr. Hesperus, the American.

"Pardon me," he said; "I am sadly in want of a conveyance. Might I charter a carriage for you, Lord Dacre, and will Monsieur Brutone accept a seat?"

Louis Brutone shivered as if he had been plunged into a bath of cold water. This man, who was he? Why did his cruel, steel-blue eyes fasten themselves upon him, as if they had the power of burning their way through his very flesh to his inner soul? Was he that awful president whose face nobody was ever allowed to see, and who held the power of life and death over (so Louis believed) nearly every one with whom he came into contact? Was this the man whose slave-spies were scattered all over Europe, waiting but his command to do his bidding?

Had he guessed, by the pallor of Louis' face, that he had met the man he was sworn to murder, in that perfumed room upstairs? and was he aware that the victim stood now in the marble-paved hall of this sumptuous villa?

"Will Monsieur Brutone accept a seat?"

Those steel-blue eyes were fixed on Louis, and he had no power to refuse.

Lord Dacre hastened to explain that his hired carriage was coming for him, and it ended in the three driving away together.

"NO NIGHT THERE"

The night is eloquent, with stars,
And moonlight drifting all;
I love to hear the whip-poor-will,
And harken to the hoot owl's call.
The night is perfect peace in Spring
Except where death steals in and fear—
Except where orphaned children cry
Or crime prowls darkly far and near.

To those at ease the night is kind—
The night is gentle balm to me—
But what of lost and sin-wrecked girls
And gale-lashed mariners at sea?
But what of sentries standing guard
In lonely outposts; what of men
Driving trains through dark and fog
Anxious for the dawn again?

What of watchers by sick-beds,
Who mark, with tears, the falling breath.
What of mothers waiting sons,
Mired in sins more sad than death.

In Heaven, God will be white stars,
The dawn, the sunset, endless light;
Yes, He will be the mid-day sun,
And there will be no night—no night!

A. L. Charlesworth, 24, fined $321 for driving car when drunk causing two mishaps at Ocean City, N.J.

tomed to saying farewell to little groups of Christian people, but there were special reasons why this goodbye at Corinth was significant and difficult. Corinth came as near being a settled pastorate as Paul ever had. For eight years it was his home. He might stay a few weeks in this town or that but he had settled down in Corinth, had supported himself there by tent-making and had wrought himself into the life of the community. Moreover he had guided the church at Corinth in a very special manner. He had given a great deal of his time and thought and anxiety to its welfare and now at last this prolonged and happy ministry must come to its end.

Mr. Sisco felt sure that on that farewell day Paul said a little to the people about the Christian liberty they had stood for there in Corinth. As a minister of the Gospel in Renfrew he (the speaker) had stood for tolerance. For three years he had sounded that note. It seemed to him an utterly impossible thing to reduce Christianity to hard and fast systems of doctrine and to force people into all kinds of theological straight jackets. If a man was willing to accept Jesus Christ as his personal Lord and Saviour he had felt that that entitled him to membership in the Christian church. Let him hold whatever opinions he would about doctrines—that was not a vital matter. The vital thing was that he identify himself with Jesus Christ and what He stood for, and that he be filled with the spirit of the Master. And if that was not the centre of Christianity where would we find it?

Mr. Sisco said he had ever insisted that it was possible and feasible and right to gather people around that common purpose and to let them think as they would about the details of theology and doctrine.

Again, he had emphasized the need of an inclusive church as against an exclusive one. He had felt that the tragedy of church history had been that any time anybody got hold of a new idea of doctrine of polity, he went out, if he had power enough and founded a new denomination to represent it. Sometimes these independent movements were necessary and right; some vital principle was at stake and had to be maintained. But he felt that the task committed to us today was to transcend these differences and to rear an inclusive church which would realize unity while at the same time embracing different types of life. He had trained his mind along that line and had tried to train his congregation along it.

Mr. Sisco, continuing, told of trying to incorporate the strong points of different denominations, of his endeavors while here to interpret the Christian message in terms of modern thought and life, of his having stood for the social application of the principles of Jesus to modern life. He thanked his congregation for the liberty given him in preaching the gospel in terms of modern needs. He expected great things from the union of the two congregations and urged all to stand by the church and give loyal support to it. He paid high tribute to Rev. M. Rollins and made reference to the presence of members of the Baptist congregation; also paid tribute to the Rev. Mr. Going.

Two Churches Merge Into One

At the time of the consummation of union on June 10, 1925, St. Andrew's Presbyterian and Trinity Methodist Churches both became a part of the United Church of Canada and thus there have been two United Churches in Renfrew.

On the eve of Mr. Sisco's departure they became one under the pastorate of Rev. James Rollins, who was in the Presbyterian Church at Renfrew before union, having been a resident pastor for five years. They held an inauguration service, just before Mr. Sisco left for Port Hope, which united the congregations, Sunday schools, choirs and officials of both United Churches into one body which will use one church for Sunday services and the other for week day activities.

So Mr. Sisco has left a very happy situation, to come to his new charge in Port Hope, where he has already delivered some very inspiring sermons.

Former Port Hope Minister Supplying

Rev. A. H. Going, who is occupying the Renfrew pulpit while Rev. Jas. Rollins is away on his vacation is well known to Port Hoppers, having been a pastor here for a term during the time of the former Methodist Church.

Given Parting Gifts

When Rev. and Mrs. Sisco and their children, Norman and Ruth, started for Port Hope they brought with them as parting gifts received at the hands of the quarterly board on the previous evening, a club bag and a purse accompanied by an address showing the esteem in which they were held there and how Mr. Sisco's three year's ministry there was appreciated by his congregation.

CROP REPORT

Below will be found a brief synopsis of telegraphic reports received at the Head Office of the Bank of Montreal from its Branches. The Branch Managers have complete and intimate knowledge of each local situation and are in close touch with crop conditions in all sections of the districts mentioned.

Province of Quebec

Grain and root crops are promising; there is a heavy stand of hay, and pastures are in good condition. Fruit prospects generally are good but development is late. Tobacco is making good progress.

Province of Ontario

Fall wheat is beginning to turn and a good average crop is expected. Spring grains have made rapid growth and are nearly all headed out. Heavy crops are expected. The recent warm weather has helped the corn crop. Cutting of hay is now general, and the yield will be above the average. Root crops look promising especially potatoes. Tobacco is making rapid growth with good prospects. Small fruits promise a good average crop. Cherries, apples and pears are making a good showing. Pastures are in excellent condition.

Maritime Provinces

Potatoes show splendid growth everywhere, but especially in New Brunswick, where their present condition is estimated at 95 per cent of perfect. While there has been some winter killing on hay lands, mainly in New Brunswick and Western Nova Scotia, an above average crop of hay is nevertheless expected. Pasturage is very good. Indications point to an average apple crop.

British Columbia

Recent rains have caused slight damage to the hay crop, but a good yield is expected. A large portion of the first cutting of alfalfa in the Okanagan district has been practically ruined through continuous rains. Provided there are no further rains, the loss from scab on apples to size very rapidly, they should be larger than average. Apples are estimated to yield 110% of the average crop; cherries 50%, pears 70%; plums and prunes 90%; hops 100%; tomatoes 130% and small fruits 90%.

HEARD ON THE STREET

Are you going on the excursion?

The big United Church Young People's annual excursion, one of the events of the season will make a pleasant holiday for you and your friends—come, join the happy throng for the trip to Rochester on Wednesday.

Tomorrow we're going up to the big Garden Party at Mrs. Don McMillan's on Bedford Street! St. Paul's Presbyterian Ladies Aid have planned to make this one of the most delightful lawn socials of the summer. Better plan to be there!

With their neighbors on both sides getting all fixed up it was too much a strain for the Royal Bank Block owners, so they have started to put their building in shape in order that they will not be outshone by their neighbors.

We notice some of the boys who have had leisure vacation days have returned to their arduous labors. And now they'll work by "the sweat of their brows" while others in the office are off in cool delightful places.

The annual picnic of St. Paul's Presbyterian Sunday School will be held on Wednesday, August 8th, at Sylvan Glen.

The Town Council meet tonight for general business.

John Vernon Fenn, Belleville, has been apprehended by the Whitty police and will face several charges of obtaining goods under false pretenses. Fenn was at one time employed in a Whitty garage, and it is alleged that he purchased several articles from merchants promising to settle on pay day. He is said to have obtained a car in the same manner.

Building permits for Oshawa for the first two weeks of July have already totalled $81,500—thirty eight permits having been issued. Thirteen of these were for dwellings. The figures as compiled by the city engineer do not constitute a record, but show that building in Oshawa is much on the boom. Building has already commenced on the site of the recent fire at Bradley's rink where a permit for an apartment house has been taken out.

OBSERVATIONS AT TEMPLE OF SUN

Interesting Studies Carried Astronomers Into Central Bolivia

Professor Arturo Posnansky, scientist and founder of the Tiahuanacu museum, and Dr. Rolf Muller, sub-director of the astronomical observatory at Potsdam, have just returned from an investigation carried out in the prehistoric ruins on the banks of Lake Titicaca.

At the Temple of the Sun situated in these ruins, Posnansky and Muller observed the stars, sun and moon from the same post at which the ancient Tiahuanacan priests took observations thousands of years ago.

The scientists made their observations from June 20 to 23, the time of the Solstice being June 21. The difference between the Tiahuanacan meridian as figured by the ancient priests, and the meridian of today is only 57 minutes, thus demonstrating the exactitude with which the ancient astronomers carried out their studies.

According to Muller and Posnansky the ancients probably used the polar stars to determine the meridian, establishing with very fine metals the culmination of some of them, thus determining a line exactly south which they marked with a great white sign painted on the side of the mountain of rock, 15 kilometers from Tiahuanacu. This could be distinguished from the observatory in the Temple of the Sun, appearing about the size of an egg.

Years ago Professor Posnansky announced his theory that the ancient Tiahuanacans knew mathematically the angle of ecliptic obliquity. He sets the age of the temple at 13,000 years, the oldest granite Temple of the Sun in the world.
