The council went into committee as a whole, to discuss the question and it was moved by H. Nelson of Percy, that the debt be paid and that all high schools and Collegiates and continuation schools in the counties be treated likewise. In seconding the motion, Geo. Thompson, of Cobourg, desired that the stigma of past Cobourg, should be recalled.

MINISTER IS TAXI DRIVER

Rev. Thomas Whelpley Picks Up Strange Fares on City's Curbs

Rev. Thomas Harvey Whelpley, pastor of Chelsea Presbyterian church on West 23rd Street, New York, by day and driver of a taxi cab by night, is a Canadian who was born at Dartmouth, N.S., and served as a lieutenant in the Canadian army overseas. He has relatives in Toronto.

His adventures at the wheel bring him into touch with every stratum of New York society and give him an insight into the night life of the town.

He is not obliged to drive his cab. The church of which he is pastor is a prosperous one. Why does he do it?

Let him answer in his own words:—"I wouldn't take double fare for any of the experience I've had since I started 'hacking.'"

"I intend to keep at the job every night until I have a pretty good slant of New York in general. My motive is purely personal."

It's a tough job to be a cab driver in New York. He found that out. One must be an expert driver, must know the city and must be patient—for it takes several weeks to obtain a hack license and land a cab. Throughout the entire proceedings, Whelpley made no attempt to work a "pull" through friends.

One of his first fares was a young man who hailed him near the Grand Central station.

"How about getting me a babe?" the youth asked. "Drive me around until we see something nice."

A few minutes later on Seventh Ave. a trim figure flashed before some electric lights and brought them to an abrupt stop. The boy slipped out of the cab with a hurried command to wait for him.

He was back in a jiffy—alone.

"Take me home, I know when I'm licked. That turned out to be mother's maid. Seems to me I never can come down here from college without running in some kind of a third class break. Suppose I'll have to make up some kind of a song and dance to hand mother before the maid gets home and tells her what a John Gilbert I turned out to be."

The boy lived on the upper East Side. The tip was large in spite of the failure of the campaign.

One Saturday afternoon as he was driving along 42nd St. a lady with carmine lips lifted a frothy finger.

"Down to the ferry, honey," she said.

Arrived at the dock, he was in the street immediately, opening the door.

"You ain't such a bad looking guy, are you?" she asked him. "Look me up some time. No use botherin' about the fare. You wouldn't charge a little girl a fare, would ya?"

"Sorry, ma'm. I'm not in the business for fun—or love either," he added.

"Okeh. Your wife's got you slowed down to a standstill. Here's a quarter. That'll get some shoe strings for the baby's shoes, anyway," she flung at him as she left.

There was a big heart, he thought. That quarter probably meant more. He used his car into the stream going to her than $100 does on Park Ave. ing down Park.

Rev. Thomas Harvey Whelpley was born in Dartmouth on the eastern side of Halifax harbor. His father was the manager of the Starr Manufacturing Co.'s plant there. He was a quiet, retiring lad, studious and determined to get ahead. He attended the Dartmouth school, later the Halifax county academy and still later Dalhousie University. He was a popular student among those who knew him, but not greatly interested in the social life of the college city.

Even in the early hectic days of the war he did not stir out of the calm that enveloped him. Then the Dalhousie unit was recruited and Harvey Whelpley joined as a private.

He went to France and apparently found that life surged in a red tide outside of books. He won his lieutenant's stars. After the war he still liked books but people appealed to him more than in the old days and he found pleasure in social life. But he did not lose his determination to become a minister and he graduated

DARING HOLDUP AT TORONTO

Six Unknown Bandits Raid C.N.R. Mail Car—Escape With $40,000

A lightning swift raid on a Canadian National Railways mail car netted six unknown bandits. Between $30,000 and $40,000 at the Union Station at Toronto at 12.45 this (Wednesday) morning, daylight saving time.

Later reports at 3 o'clock this morning state that the loss may amount to close to $100,000.

There were at least half a dozen bandits implicated in the bold descent upon the registered mail routed for Detroit and Chicago, and as they leaped into the mail car each of them whipped out his revolver and covered the mail clerks. The railwaymen had not a chance to defend the registered mail.

Four bags, in all, were seized and thrown into a waiting sedan car, which flashed out westward to the Lake Shore Road.

Although a police car containing Sergt. Scott and P.C. Watt was able to give chase, and followed at a terrific pace along Fleet Street, the bandits' machine was lost sight of at Sunnyside. Police reinforcements were called out and the larger Police Headquarters car was sent to patrol the Lake Shore clear through to Hamilton.

The police have the license number borne by the bandits' car. J. Hutcheon, who was standing on Station Street talking to some taxi men just before the robbery, had noticed the Knight sedan at the station and what he thought to be the queer actions of the half dozen men inside. The number plates on the machine also appeared to him to have been tampered with.

His suspicions, indeed, were so much aroused that he walked off to inform a policeman of them, and while he was gone the swift robbery took place.

Hutcheon told the police that the men appeared to give evidence of having been drinking. When he walked up for a close view of what to him looked like a suspicious automobile, one of them gruffly ordered him to keep at distance.

That the robbery was a carefully planned and well thought out coup was demonstrated by the timely precision with which the men forced their way through the station, past standing mail trucks, and directly alongside the mail car a few minutes before it was due to pull out of the station.

The machine came down Station Street to its objective and drove thru the open ship to the mail car. One of the bandits was sufficiently bold to leap out and thrust aside one of the mail hand trucks which stood in the way of the automobile.

This done the road to the door of the mail car was clear and with a swift rush the automobile was pulled alongside, and in an instant at least four men, with drawn revolvers, were in the mail car, covering the astonished clerks.

Hutcheon, who told his story to the police immediately after the robbery, said that, from the survey he made of the bandit machine and the bandits themselves he thinks he could identify every one of them.

At 1.30 this morning the police were scouring not only the Hamilton Highway, but the Dundas Highway, and other likely hiding spots in and about Toronto. Steps were being taken to acquaint border police of the occurrence and the police net was being drawn tight at every possible avenue of escape.

FILE NOW TIED FOR 1ST PLACE

Bankers Blow Up in 2 Innings And File Win Handily 10-4

Buck Tweed's aggregation jumped into a tie for first position in the Port Hope softball loop Tuesday evening when they won handily from the Bankers 10 to 4 at Viaduct Park. The balloon went up in the third and seventh innings, when the File Makers scored nine of their ten runs.

The File bagged fourteen hits to the Bankers' thirteen, but the Coin jugglers paved the way to their own defeat by four errors, three of which went to Spencer, the first's third sacker. McCannell, who has been absent from the Bankers' lineup for the last few games, returned to the game Tuesday evening, after cavorting down around Sydneyham. He issued two free tickets, while Nelson, walked three batsmen and whiffed Wade, who went in to pinch hit for O'Neil in the seventh. The File combd McCannell's offerings for 7 hits in the third frame and, coupled with a walk, manufactured five runs. The Copper counters came back strong and notched three counters on four hits and a walk, and added another marker in the fourth.

The Bankers had hopes of the game until the File boosted their total to ten by scoring four runs in the lucky seventh. Tweed hit thru short and Winters followed with a smesh to right. Tweed scored on Perry's infield out and Wallace secured a life when Spicer dropped his line-drive, and Winters came home. Welch came through with a crashing triple to left centre, sending in Wallace, and Welch counted when Spicer threw wild to first.

Fitzsimmons led with a safety in the last stanza, and Manager Tozer inserted two pinch hitters, Wade, batting for O'Neil, fanned, Winfield popped to left field, and Munro, batting for Melville, raised to third. The teams:

File—Welch, ss; Travin, rf; Nelson, p; Wakeley, c; Foote, 3rd; Tweed 2nd; Winters, 1st; Perry, lf; Wallace cf.

Heated Discussion Ensued At Spring Session of Counties Council at Cobourg

HEROES ARE IGNORED

A rather comprehensive American-made film of aviation and recording the names of men and women whose flights have contributed to its advancement is being shown in Ontario at the present time. The picture is interesting. It reaches its culmination in the acclamation of Col. Charles Lindbergh as the greatest of all men in the air. But in this somewhat detailed history of aviation, the names of the first two men to make a successful nonstop flight across the Atlantic are not even mentioned.

Nine years ago, on the seventh of June, Captain John Alcock and Lt. Arthur Brown made the first non-stop transatlantic flight. Nine years is quite a long time, but hardly long enough to obliterate the record of this very notable achievement. The two British airmen happened to be born on the other side of the ocean. They are not Americans nor have they any inclination to become such. But this fact should not militate against their recognition as airmen of note even in an American-made film.

Protests against the showing of American films have been heard from many quarters for a long time. Various organizations throughout the Dominion as well as in other countries deplore the exaggerated impression of American prestige conveyed by many of these pictures. In not a few Canadian enterprises is belittled or ignored.

The situation is unfortunate, but it bids fair to continue. The United States has no monopoly upon heroes or upon heroic achievement and the sooner the great producing companies, which must consider their foreign patrons, realize this fact and give credit where credit is due, the sooner will criticism come to an end.—Kitchener Record.

2 INJURED BY BELLEVILLE CAR

Harold Sayers Is Remanded On Charge of Driving While Drunk

Harold Sayers of Belleville, was remanded for one week on bail of $2,000 Tuesday on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

It was alleged that Sayers ran amuck through the principal streets of the city early Tuesday morning. The result of his alleged escapade was the placing of two members of the Argyle Light Infantry Band in the hospital and the wounding of several others. He is said to have driven his car directly into the face of the moving troops.

The band was returning from a parade at the Fair Grounds, and the driver, said to have been on the left hand side of the road, allegedly plowed into the parade. Fred Power received a broken leg. Arthur Rowland's suffered three fractured ribs, and Frank Howard, Harold Groves and William Hart, severe cuts and bruises.

Sayers is alleged to have started his wild ride on Front Street, when his car is said to have swung in to one owned by Leon Walastry. He then is alleged to have bumped into another car, and then into the front of a store on Main Street. So hard was the impact against the store front that the car, police say, bounced back to the police, then continued across the lower bridge nearly running down three young ladies who were crossing the street. He is then said to have continued on Bridge Street, and to have crashed into the soldiers.

Dr. Steble attended the wounded men at the hospital. The soldiers of the regiment captured Sayers and handed him over to the police.

THE GUIDE STORY

Guided by the faint rays of the lantern, the girls reached the public road. Ads had promised them to sit up, and she had given Augustine the key of the door and the wall which turned easily.

Soon the three were in the omnibus office gathered round the fire. They all kept their veils down. The omnibus came rumbling up; they got in, and the journey proceeded without so much as the shadow of an adventure. They changed omnibuses, and were finally set down in the Rue de Rivoli.

The brilliant lights, the open spaces and the crowds, made a scene like day; the snow glimmered in heaps at the sides of the way; the cold was piercing.

"Now," said Augustine, beginning to show off her scant stock of English—"now we pursue until I stop. I tell you I know the road to the house of the sorceress; have no fear—behold me," and away she sped, the other two after her.

Augustine went on bravely. She crossed the bridge, and presently darted down a narrow, ill lighted street. Angry cries, evil scents, noisy women were around them.

"Oh, I don't like this!" cried Vesta. Augustine stood still.

"You of England are so timid," she said with a laugh.

"But is it so far from here, Augustine?" asked April.

"Ten minutes; it's quite near. Are your feet tired? I thought you of England walked so well?"

"Not tired," cried April; "but don't you feel the snow? It is coming down fast. How is one to find the way in such a storm?"

And indeed the snow was coming down fast.

"Call a cab," said April. There was not a cab to be seen, and the few people that the young ladies met belonged to a class that they were afraid to accost—they had the look of ruffians and thieves.

Augustine still marched on, but the painful truth smote now upon Vesta and April that their leader had lost her way, and had not the remotest idea whether she was going.

The snow came down with such a whirling force, and the wind made such a noise, that the girls were deafened and stupefied. An archway close at hand under which stood empty barrels, tempted them to get under shelter.

"We will stand here until we see someone who will call a cab," said Augustine. Neither of the others had much hope of this, but it was something to stand sheltered for a few moments from the snow and wind.

"Augustine is a sham," said April, angrily, to Vesta. "She boasts like all these French; and we—we well we have acted like lunatics."

"We shall be murdered," said Vesta, with a half sob. "Oh, if some friend would come!"

"I hope not," returned April, dryly. "I should be ashamed."

"Here is a door and a knocker," cried Augustine; "these must be the offices of a wine merchant. Let me knock." And she seized the knocker, which neither of the others had perceived in the darkness, and knocked loudly.

Almost at once footsteps were heard inside and a man's gruff voice asked:

"Who goes there?"

"We have lost the way," returned

Augustine in French.

In an instant the chains and bolts were withdrawn, the door swung back and the three school girls were looking into a square, neat hall covered with a lamp.

"Come in," said a short white-haired man in dark cloth.

This man had shaggy brows and a great mouth.

The girls shrank back.

"Come in—come in!" said the man. "See, we have lost the way. We want the Rue Plumet d'Or."

"Don't know it; but enter; the gentleman will put you right if you wait."

"What an idiot of a man!" said Vesta to April.

"Go up—go up to the fire," said the man. "I tell you in an instant the gentleman will arrive."

"He means his master," said Augustine. "Yes, I for one will go to a fire, for I am stupid with cold, and there may be a maid servant who is not a donkey."

As she spoke, she ran lightly up the stairs after the strange man servant and the others followed.

The man led the way down a long corridor, and opened the door.

The girls saw a large, partially furnished room, a great fire burned in a low grate; there was a high wooden mantel shelf; the walls were wainscoted; the apartment was old-fashioned, somber; an air of mystery hung over it.

Suddenly the serving-man went to the door, passed out, slammed it, and the girls heard him turn the key in the lock.

"We are in a thieves' house," said Augustine calmly. "Now, the thing is, will they kill us if we give them all we have? I have my little gold watch, which cost two hundred francs; I have a golden napoleon, and some silver. How much have you?"

REGINALD DENNY HERE TOMORROW

Good Clean Fun Assured In Popular Star's Latest Comedy Drama

"Good Morning, Judge," which opens at the Royal Theatre tomorrow, is a typical Reginald Denny production; it has rapid action, excellent comedy and a pleasing romantic angle.

This time the star appears as a scion of wealth who can't pay his fine when brought before a judge, also participating as an innocent bystander in a fight. Someone has stolen his wallet.

A beautiful mission worker who believes that hardened crooks can be reformed advances the sum. Denny falls in love with her and, in order to become an inmate of her mission, confesses to a long list of crimes. Later, he saves her from some of the criminals whom she thought she had reformed.

Mary Nolan plays opposite Denny and Dorothy Gulliver, beautiful heroine of the "Collegeians," has a prominent role. The hundreds of laughs are partly due to Otis Harlan. In the role of an unshaven bum, whose specialty is crashing the gates at prize fights, Harlan demonstrates a superb skill in comedy. Denny, by himself, however, provides enough funny scenes for an ordinary picture.

LIGHTS ARE SEEN FROM AFAR

Monday night late campers along Lake Ontario saw clearly the lights of Toronto. Not only could the light blaze be seen, but it was a simple matter to pick out individual lights. One bright spot, evidently a sign of some description, could be seen flashing distinctly. Though the lights are seen from time to time at Port Dalhousie, it is very seldom that they are seen as distinctly as they were Monday evening.

BOY ACCIDENTALLY SHOT IN THE BACK

Andrew Heaslip of Janetville In Lindsay Hospital Following Accident

Andrew Heaslip of Janetville, was accidentally shot about ten miles from Lindsay on Sunday. He was cycling along the road, at the time he was hit. Some boys were shooting in a nearby woods, and accidentally shot the boy riding on the bicycle. There is little information as to what really occurred, although the provincial police are investigating. The boy is in the Ross Memorial Hospital, Lindsay, at present, and is doing well. He was hit in the back. The rifles were of .22 calibre.

Andrew Heaslip had been out to a farmer's house with two friends, Edward White and Walter Leopold, for the afternoon. About four o'clock, they started home, White and Leopold leaving the farm first. After they had gone, Heaslip jumped on his bicycle and started out after them. When he had passed, White fired a shot at a tree near the road. He missed this and hit Heaslip in the back.

ALWAYS SO

Time was that my grandfather, shaking his head, looked at us youngsters and openly said,

"From the way we were going as fast as we could, 'Twas plain to be seen that we would come to no good."

And I know, for I got it from old Uncle Jim. That's what his grandfather said about him.

My grandfather said: "Just get after that child! I can't understand why you let him run wild!

These new fangled notions are certain to fail. You mark me, that rascal will end up in jail."

Yet well I remember that my Uncle Jim told me that his grandfather said that of him.

Go back through the ages and hark to the old. The boys are too wild and the girls are too bold.

The young generation's behavior is such. Not one has a chance of amounting to much!

Yet I chuckle as greybeards my youngsters condemn. That's what their grandfathers said about them.

GEORGES MICHEL COMING

While his official entry form has not yet reached Toronto, Georges Michel, the Parisian Channel swimmer, who came second in the C.N.E. marathon last year, is considered a certain starter in the third Wrigley Marathon at this year's Ex.

The C.N.E. Sports Dept. received a flowery epistle from the rotund Georges in which he announces his intention of forsaking the little bakery on the banks of the Seine this summer to make another plunge in Lake Ontario.

With the famous Frenchman's letter came another dozen entries from scattered sections of United States as well as a couple of Europeans. These include Gustave Ben, a German swimmer, who has arrived in New York to swim, and Aldo Santarelli, an Italian. A young American who was a strong favorite in last summer's marathon is also in again, Wallace Key Mullin of Kansas City. Among the women entrants is a 17 year old Kincardine girl, Pauline Schaeffer, and an American physical culture expert, Dr. Charlotte D. Gantz, of Providence, R.I., who will attempt to demonstrate the effectiveness of her own training theories. One Toronto woman was added to the list, Miss H. Miller, 880 1-2 Queen St. west.

Twin sisters became brides of twin brothers at Berwick, Pa.

EXPERIMENT WITH QUEENS A SUCCESS

Possible to Keep Two Queens in Hive and Increase Production of Honey

An ingenious beekeeper in Montana, has succeeded in making two queens dwell peacefully together in the same hive. His method is based on a new conception of the spirit of the hive and with it comes larger crops of honey, produced at lower costs with less equipment and greater stability in the industry. For many years beekeepers have desired to work out just such a plan by which they could keep two queens at work in one hive, laying eggs and swelling the population of worker bees to be ready for the honey flow.

In carrying out his idea, Mr. Lawrence, the inventor, adopted a hive a little different in construction from the common hive arrangement, where one queen has the range of the whole brood chamber, and hive and supers for surplus stores of honey are the same width. In his, the brood chamber containing two queens, is made a few inches wider than the ordinary Langstroth hive. It is divided by a thin division board and has seven Langstroth frames on each side of this partition. Above the brood chamber are ordinary ten-frame supers for storage of honey.

The extra width of the brood chamber extending on each side of the supers is of course, boarded over. It is obvious that two queens, working steadily at a moderate pace, can keep the two compartments producing workers to fill the supers above more easily than the one queen in the larger brood chamber, where, as a matter of fact, she usually neglects the outer combs and at the same time is likely to weaken herself in an orgy of egg laying and bring on the conditions that lead the workers to cell building and supersedure in the middle of the honey flow, which spoils bees and failure for the season. Queens that are plodders do not do this. On seven combs or less it is impossible for a queen to reach a peak and automatically she is forced to be a plodder. This was the fundamental idea of two queens.

This was the fundamental idea for two queens.

Lawrence insists on good, well-made equipment. Everything in his apiary is neat and shipshape. He makes his hives wide enough to take fourteen frames and two division boards. This is to accommodate the two queens with their bees and also provide for setting off nucleus at one side of the hive to raise a queen.

Finding, or producing as he easily can, a queen cell from his fine breeder queens he has simply to set off two frames of bees and brood partitioned with a division board, and insert the cell. In due time the queen catches and mates from this apartment of the hive. The rest of the bees going right on with their work. In doing this, Mr. Lawrence provides an entrance for the queen raising nucleus at the rear of the hive by cutting out a short section of the rim of the bottom board.

Another feature in the Lawrence fourteen-frame hive is the division board. He keeps an excluder on permanently over the frames. He always winters two queens in a hive. In this way he says he has "a 200 per cent chance of wintering 100 per cent good." That is, if one queen dies he simply pulls out the divisor board and the other queen replaces the disappeared one. Later a cell or a queen is introduced on one side of the division board.

Those who expect to purchase colonies from neighboring beekeepers should carefully examine them before purchasing. There is a great difference in the value of colonies of bees at this time. The most important things to note when selecting colonies at this time are the size of the cluster and the amount of honey in the hive. The strength as to the number of bees can be estimated by removing the cover and noting how much space the bees occupy. When the weather is warm the colony expands so the temperature must be taken into consideration when judging the size of the cluster. The amount of honey can be determined roughly by weighing the hive as it stands and comparing the weight with that of an empty hive.

Other things to look for are the kind of hives and combs. Colonies in old dilapidated hives or hives containing crooked combs are worth much less than colonies in good hives containing straight combs having mostly cells of worker size, that are about 1-5 inch in diameter.

Where there is a choice between colonies built up from a swarm last season and the parent colony, it is usually best to choose the parent colony, other things being equal. This is because the parent colony has the young queen, the old queen having gone out with the prime swarm last summer.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY MEETS AT COBOURG

School methods of teaching Canadian history were scored by several speakers at the annual meeting of the Ontario Historical Society, that opened at Cobourg in St. Peter's Parish Hall Tuesday. Members were present from all over Southern Ontario, in the largest gathering for some years. Some members recalled having been punished at their school by being ordered to write out long paragraphs of history. How could our children ever learn to love their country's history or their country, under such conditions, it was asked.

President Fred Landon of London, suggested great untapped fields for history writers in Canada in the collection of local, social, and business records, beginning right at home, and making the material attractive to everybody. The 54 volumes published by the Ontario Historical Society, were mentioned as containing a vast amount of material of value to future historians.

W. C. Mikel, K.C., Belleville, in a stirring address, urged an amendment to the Ontario Custody of Documents Act so as to provide that a public official in each county be designated as a custodian for private documents which would be of value for future historians.

The society is holding its own, and increasing its publications, according to Secretary A. F. Hunter. Prof. A. H. Young of Toronto, related the history of the Bethune family, celebrated here and elsewhere in Canada.

Miss Clara Field read an instructive paper on the literary landmarks of Northumberland and Durham, and late in the evening the visitors were driven to the shores of Rice Lake, the region made famous as the home of Archibald Lampman, poet, and Mrs. Susanna Moodie, author of "Roughing it in the Bush."

A good number of dance devotees enjoyed the Tuesday evening program at the Beach Pavilion here. Al Stagg's five piece orchestra was in attendance and dancing will also be held tomorrow night.

Orchardists in this district have been busy the past week spraying their fruit trees. The earlier varieties of apples, such as Alexanders, Duchess and Snows, have been treated to the spray, and the winter apples are receiving the same treatment. It is said there is not as much evidence of scab or insect injury as was expected in orchards that have been cared for every season. The bloom this spring was all that could be desired. It is, however, too early in the season to estimate as to fruit prospects.

If a few of those holes on Ward St. were filled in, it would be a whole lot smoother driving up to the park on Dominion Day.

At the regular session of the Belle ville City Council, the rate of taxation for the year was set at 45.6; the highest it has been in some years and a tenth of a mill over last year. The total assessment of the city is now $9,844,907, with an estimated population of 13,500.

Barrfield is again a military tented place as the Second Mounted Brigade, the Princess Louise's Dragoon Guards of Ottawa, the Third Princess of Wales Dragoons of Peterboro and the Fourth Hussars of Iroquois, went into camp Tuesday afternoon. Colonel L. P. Sherwood is in command of the brigade.

Laurence, C. B. Kelly, D. A. Shay, C. Roberts, W. Oke. Assisting them were Mesdames G. Caldwell, S. Brickell, W. Hills, N. N. Brimmin, A. Moore, G. Ward, Jas. Walker, J. T. Mears, R. and W. O'Neill.

The talent table behind banks of lilacs in the living room was well looked after by Mesdames Wm. Evans, S. R. Caldwell, E. A. Darch, S. Johnston, J. Spicer, J. Boundy, and G. Darling.

Miss Gladys Westaway arranged an excellent musical program, provided by Misses Thelma Martin, Florence Patterson and Marie Canella, with vocal numbers as well as the piano selections by Eleanor Kelly and little Kathleen Welsh, who show great promise for the future.
