

HOW TO TURN AT INTERSECTIONS

HIGHWAY SAFETY COMMITTEE

HEARD ON THE STREET

Market Day * * *
All the merchants will be doing a big business today with the crowds of buyers and tomorrow they will rest from their labors.

Sunday will be Rev. F. W. Anderson's last day to officiate at the services in the United Church. There will be a large turnout to hear his closing sermons and he will start by motor Monday for his new charge at Nanaimo, B.C., with the best wishes of all Port Hope.

More like New York every day! Millbrook is going to have its main street paved.

Two robbers invaded the Grand Central Terminal, New York, shortly before noon yesterday, slugged a man they thought was carrying a $3,500 payroll, discovered he was the wrong man, and fled without finding out that he had $2,600 in cash in a brief case. One of the robbers was captured. The victim, Grover C. Hartman, was taken to a hospital.

Dorset street is undergoing improvement with new gutters being laid, to replace former badly washed out ones. The street, however, is very narrow, while the work is being done, and all drivers need to exercise care in passing other vehicles.

Fire broke out in the farm house of Wilfred Elson, Seventh Line, Cavan, near Millbrook, a defective chimney being the cause assigned. Fortunately a large number of the men of the district, with others from passing cars, were soon on the spot, and due to their effective work as a bucket brigade, with some assistance from a chemical fire extinguisher supplied by Edgar Fallis the flames were stayed before any great amount of damage was done. A large hole was burned in the roof of the frame dwelling, and this was the chief damage done. The loss is covered by insurance. Earlier in the season Mr. Elson had his colony house with four hundred little chickens, burned as a result, it is thought, of a dropped coal from the brooder stove.

A number of the Dufferin Construction Co.'s trucks passed thru here on their way to a new job up west of here, having apparently completed the work they went east to do in May.

Howard C. Leavens, of Leavens' Cherry Orchard, Hallowell, Prince Edward County, forecasts for this year one of the largest crops of cherries on record. Mr. Leavens estimates the crop at from 16,000 to 17,000 baskets.

A Chicago man ran down a Grand Trunk locomotive and escaped with his life, but his car was completely destroyed. He also received a bill to pay for the damage done to the locomotive. Our corner friend says if you wait near the tracks and let the train go by there is no danger that it will pursue you up the road, and you may avoid paying for a locomotive and other incidental expenses often connected with meeting of automobiles and locomotives.

Poor Pat and the Fork

Two Irishmen were one day working on a farm. Just about dinner-time they were called to dine off a large basin of broth.

The farmer's wife had only one spoon, so she gave Pat a fork.

Poor Pat was getting nothing, while Mike nearly got it all. When it was about a third empty Pat said: "Arrah, now, Mike, you dig a bit and I'll shovel."

EIGHT COUNTIES TO HOLD BIG COMBINED FIELD DAY

The junior farmers of the eight counties, Northumberland and Durham, Ontario, Peterboro, Hastings, Victoria, Lennox and Addington and Prince Edward, are making arrangements for a grand field day which is to be held at Pesquiche Point. The big competition will be for the Farm and Dairy silver cup which was won by Hastings last year. July 6 is the date set.

OBJECTIONS FROM WHITBY COUNCIL

Town Council Objects To Being Named As Defendant in Court

Whitby Town Council at a special meeting Thursday night passed a resolution to the effect that while the Town of Whitby had been named as defendant in an action now before the courts to determine if Whitby or the Hospital Board of the City of Oshawa is entitled to receive the bequest left by the late Col. J. E. Farewell for hospital purposes, such is not the case, as the council did not authorize such defence to be entered in the town's name. Reeve Jackson stated that he was expressing the feelings of a majority of the citizens of Oshawa when he declared that the town of Whitby did not wish to erect a hospital at the present time, as it did not have the money, nor was a hospital required, when the one at Oshawa was so close.

CHERRS GRAFTING IS A SUCCESS

Newcastle Orchardist Grafts Sweet Scions to Sour With Pleasing Results

Heretofore most varieties of the sweet cherries have not proved to be hardy along the north shore of Lake Ontario, but W. H. Beaman, Newcastle, has experimented, with good results so far, in grafting sweet cherry scions onto a sour cherry tree. During the spring of 1927, Mr. Beaman procured scions of Stark's Golden Sweet and grafted these onto a Montmorency tree. Several of the scions grew, and upon two of them well formed fruit may be found, which shows a marked increase in bearing. Should the experiment prove a success, it will probably be taken up also by other cherry orchardists.

of Englishtown, making remarks about passing pedestrians. Just now there appears to be another epidemic of this alleged "smartness". This sort of thing appears to be like the measles, whooping cough and other childish troubles—mighty annoying, but not dangerous, unless someone comes within reach of the law—and that may suddenly happen to our uptown boys. These young people never appreciated good advice, unless given by the police magistrates, and that costs money. But, nevertheless, we again offer it free—"Stop it, boys, before there is any trouble."

FIRE COMPANIES MEET IN COBOURG

1928 Delegates Will Hold Their Convention in Lindsay

A meeting of the Mutual Fire Insurance Companies was held in the Council Chamber, Cobourg on Tuesday. The companies represented, were The Maple Leaf of Columbus, Hamilton Township of Cobourg, Lennox and Addington of Napanee, Bay of Quinte of Picton and Farmer's Union of Lindsay.

Mr. E. P. Heaton, Fire Marshal, was present and addressed the gathering. He referred to the great work Mutual Insurance Companies were doing through the province, in giving adequate fire protection at a minimum cost. Mutual Companies carry 20 per cent of the insurance risk of the province and although a substantial reduction was shown in the first loss during the past few years, he regretted that it could not be shown with respect to the business of the Mutual Companies. He gave the following information:—

Statistics showed that out of 841 barn fires during the last three years, lightning caused 269 or 32 per cent; spontaneous combustion 193 or 23 per cent; lamps and gasoline 88 or 10 per cent; sparks on roofs and from threshing machines 88 or 10 per cent; incendiary 34 or 4 per cent; smoking and matches 25 or 3 per cent; all other causes 154 or 18 per cent.

Standard lightning rods are proven to be 99 per cent efficient, and realizing this fact and the fact that lightning takes a heavy toll of farm barns each year, farmers should take advantage of this precaution against lightning, and by covering their buildings with steel or other fire-proof roofing, they can thus eliminate 42 per cent of the danger from fire.

Mr. Hoskin from Cobourg gave an interesting paper dealing with various insurance problems, followed by a paper by Mr. Alex Horn of Lindsay on the value of education in preventing fire losses.

At the close of the meeting Mr. Horn invited the delegates to hold their convention in Lindsay next June. The invitation was accepted.

ROTARY HONORS REV. ANDERSON

BEFORE DEPARTURE FROM PORT HOPE IS PRESENTED WITH CLUB BAG

Rev. Major F. W. Anderson, M.A., former pastor of the Port Hope United Church, was honored by the Rotarians at their regular weekly luncheon at the Queen's Hotel Friday evening.

Rev. Anderson delivered a very interesting address and was followed by Rev. Dr. Jas. T. Daley, who paid tribute to Rev. Anderson's work in connection with the local Rotary club. He has been a wise counselor, committeeman and inspiring speaker. He possessed a fine personality and held the commanding respect of everyone. Fred Anderson could be summed up in three words, a man, a gentleman and a Christian.

This club represents a variety of interests of town of Port Hope. Certainly these interests would have their representatives say to Fred Anderson words of appreciation, and of warm, hearty sincerity. He has been a valuable citizen whose contribution to the welfare of the town has been no small contribution, an endowment producing dividends whose worth cannot be measured by material standards.

This club, as a club, and as a group of representative men, will join in wishing Fred a future full of the joy of service and the rewards that come from work well done.

In closing Dr. Daley hoped that Rev. Anderson would carry with him remembrances of Rotary in Port Hope and to help him carry this, presented him with a club bag.

Rev. Anderson made a suitable reply and thanked his fellow Rotarians for the gift and assured them that he would always keep a warm spot in his heart for the Port Hope Rotary Club.

INCREASE IN TOURIST TRADE

Americans Coming to Ontario at Greater Rate Than Last Year

Officials of the provincial department of highways estimate that American tourist traffic will be increased close to 30 per cent, over last year's total. At the beginning of the season it was thought that it would be greater. It is now evident that it will be far more than that.

Over fifty letters a day are received by the department asking for highway information.

Several American border points report that the tourist traffic to all points of the province is unusually heavy and is increasing day by day. The supplies of literature are practically exhausted.

HOLYROOD HOUSE

Queen Mary II Transformation Palace
—Work of Beautification—
Scottish Regalia.

The Queen's Scottish palace, Holyrood House, is haunted by many historic memories. It was originally an abbey and dates back to the year 1126.

The structure suffered from fire on several occasions, and in 1566 was the scene of the murder of David Rizzio, a favorite of Mary Queen of Scots in 1564.

The newer part of Holyrood House, which dates from Charles II's day, is now used as the residence of the sovereigns when they are staying in Edinburgh. This is generally known, no doubt, but what is not so much known outside Edinburgh is the way in which the Queen is transforming this palace. She is turning the royal apartments into a place to be lived in, in a suitably fine and distinguished manner of course, but to be lived in.

Pieces of furniture are finding their way from the south into the state apartments; new carpets of a pleasant tint of light green have been laid down in several rooms. Above all, workmen of capacity, with the zeal and patience of poets revising epics, are removing the varnish with which an intrusive decorative craze had covered all of the palace, which it could, doors and walls and incisive, deep carving round chimney pieces had all been in the last century as liberally treated with polish as if they had been boots. Paint, too, has been expunged from stretches of wood, panels, and the like, of which the pleasant grain was completely hidden.

A sort of tinsel layer of stars has been cleaned off the centre of the ceiling of a presence-chamber, which is now back in the pure white gesso state which its Italian moulders intended. One large room has been completely stripped of all fabrics, and is now a noble apartment; it is known as the breakfasting-room. A room used by the King for audiences is in the first stage after the removal of the varnish; the decorations of the fireplace here are very fine but must have been particularly difficult to clean.

All this is the Queen's work. Her Majesty's taste is having a very fortunate effect upon her subjects of Edinburgh. They come in and see the difference between former and present conditions, and are much impressed. "Queen Victoria had it all clung up with varnish," said one in my hearing, "but the Queen's changing it. Not a lick of paint and not a scrap of wallpaper anywhere in the palace, those are her orders, so they say. It looks fine."

The newest and most important alterations of all by the Queen's desire are to be made presently in the throne-room itself. I was told, when visiting this, that the characteristic blue material of George IV.'s day which covers the wall is to be stripped off and the walls will be refitted with paneling. When completed the room should make a worthy frame for the Scottish courts held by the King here, and for the display of that portion of the Scottish regalia which is used.

The Scottish regalia, housed in a room in a tower of the castle, are a mystery of Edinburgh, in so far as least that they come as a surprise, and mystery to most English visitors, who are unaware that the Scottish crown and sceptre still exist. Still less are they aware that the old crown is not only never worn by our present sovereigns, but actually must not be, by law. It is, one learns, a stipulation of the Act of Union between England and Scotland that the Scottish crown must be forever deposited in Edinburgh Castle but not to be donned by the monarch.

Looking at the crown there in the castle, one is inclined to wish that this old regulation might be abrogated. There may have been a reason for it in its day, but surely in ours England and Scotland are sufficiently welded to allow the reigning king to wear, at least once, on some formal occasion, the crown of Scotland, without this acting as a solvent of the union.

If the story of its origin and adventures as given is accurate, it is a romantic crown from its history as any in the world. The circlet was worn by Robert Bruce, and it was Mary Queen of Scots who had it transferred from that simple band of gem-studded gold into an arched crown. There is a certain simplicity about it befitting the northern kingdom; it does not glitter with diamonds, being mostly set with pearls and other quiet gems.

THE JOYS OF LONG AGO

The present may be cheerful as the dawn of Summer's day,
And for things in the future seem charming, light and gay;
Yet, nothing o'er the weary can the sweet enchantments throw,
Like the wandering of memory to the joys of long ago.

The sunshine of the moment, unbroken through it seem,
Is often quickly ruffled like the waters of a stream!
Yet, though that sun be darkened and the stream its bank o'erflow
Naugh can destroy the solace of the joys of long ago.

And when, with grief and sorrow, the heart is stricken down,
And trouble's robe of mourning succeeds the gaudy crown,
When tempests dark and awful, o'er wasted pleasures blow
It is sweet to revel fondly in the joys of long ago.

When in misfortune's season the friends we most revere,
No sympathy can give us to dry the burning tear—
When tender hopes are dying from deception's cruel blow—
'Tis sweet to pause and listen to the joys of long ago.

And when life's march is ended, and its tumult nearly o'er—
When the breakers and the surges dash upon the beach no more;
It is then when all is quiet that our memories backward flow,
Eternally to linger with the joys of long ago.

THE GUIDE STORY

"I know it."

The voice of him they called Remus was deep-toned, thrilling; but the three school girls shuddered. "Anybody who comes here and hears one word, or even sees a glimpse of either of us, must not leave this house alive." The seven voices murmured assent.

"Man, woman, youth, maiden, little child, some one, any, either of them, must die."

Again the seven voices murmured assent.

In that moment April Vaughan nerved herself by a sudden and supreme effort.

"We must escape!" she said in a fierce whisper, "must, must! Don't speak—wait!"

Whatever scheme had participated itself into the brain of April Vaughan, she had not an opportunity of carrying into effect, for suddenly and without warning the door of communication between the two rooms was violently shut, and the girls distinctly heard a bolt shot into its place, at the same time the door communicating with the landing was burst open, and the man-servant who had admitted the intruders advanced toward them.

April went forward.

The man carried a lamp in his hand, which he set on a table near the door.

"Let us out," said April, addressing the man in English.

She spoke boldly, with an undimmed coolness that astonished her school fellows, both of whom were in the deadliest fear—Augustine nearly in hysterics, Vesta white and dumb, like one panic-stricken.

"We want to get out," repeated April, more boldly. "Show us the way down the stairs, please."

The Frenchman did not understand a single word that she said; but when she took hold of the door-handle he interposed, pushing away her hand, shutting the door, bolting it (the key was outside), and then standing firmly with his back to it. His arms were folded; he was a short, thick set man, with a stupid, obstinate face; heavy eyelids, which almost hid his eyes; a long gray mustache; a square, wide chin, on which grew a grizzled, stubby beard; he wore a cloth cap and a gray overcoat, something like an officer's undress uniform, with a belt around the waist.

"Silence, if you please," said this man, in French. "You came here under false pretenses, and you will not get out again, I assure you, so easily."

April Vaughan answered him in English: "We are school-girls—English—we hardly know any French, and we don't know what you are saying; but we must get out—must, do you hear?"

"I do not understand one word of the language which you speak," returned the man, "so do not waste your time in talking such gibberish, if you please."

At this point, Augustine broke into loud, hysterical weeping. David, the servant in the gray coat, did not budge one inch; his arms were still folded; he looked as if he had contemplated the decapitation of half a dozen people, without, as the phrase goes, "turning a hair."

Augustine, with her French instincts and her French nature—impulsive, daring, cowardly, boastful, servile, arrogant, humble, all by turns—felt it impossible any longer to figure in the eyes of her stubborn fellow countryman as a young woman incapable of speaking her own language; she hastened to spoil all that April had said. She flung herself upon her knees before the man in the gray coat; she lifted up her voice and wept:

"I am French, of your own country; these demoiselles are English, and only speak our language imperfectly; but we are innocent; let us go; we are school girls, and we shall be expelled from our school if we are not found in our places before ten tonight. We came out to have our fortune told by Madame Flavette, in the Rue Plumes d'Or, and we lost our way, and so got into this street, and rapped at the door. Why did you make us come in—tell me that, monsieur, for pity's sake?"

"I will tell you nothing, if you please," returned David, doggedly. "I prefer silence on my own part and on yours also, and I may add that falsehood will not avail you in the least."

David had been a soldier in Algiers; he had been active during the siege and during the Commune; he had military instincts, which taught him to obey orders to the letter, no matter what master he served under. He had the instincts of a serf, in short; but he was faithful always (for the time being) to the authority under which he had enrolled himself. He understood very little of the cause whose paid agent he was at present. He found, however, that money was plentiful and easily earned. He was desperately afraid of his chief, whose face he had never once seen, but whose power he believed to be occult, if not supreme. "Falshoods! I am speaking the truth," said the weeping Augustine. "Will you tell us of what we are accused?"

"Of being spies, and spies must pay the penalty."

"And what is the penalty?" asked April, in French.

"Ah! ah!" said David, with a cruel laugh. "Then mademoiselle has found, after all, a tongue wherewith to speak French."

NEW PLANE CARRIER

Latest Addition to Britain's Naval Forces Proves Her Usefulness—Launch Thirty-Five 'Planes'

The secret of Great Britain's new monster airplane carrier is revealed. Despatches tell of the trial conducted at Gibraltar which demonstrated the great addition to the modern fleet unit of today which this new vessel will provide. With her great landing deck the size of a football field and with her carrying capacity of thirty-five airplanes, the greatest of all airplane carriers, leads the navy of the world.

In the first manoeuvre conducted off Gibraltar it was shown that this vessel launched and harbored thirty-five 'planes, a swarm of torpedo-carrying mosquitos, to launch deadly stings against hostile vessels engaged in the battle. While she proved a menace to the enemy she was also shown to be vulnerable. At least four out of the six aerial torpedoes launched against her registered hits.

The huge landing deck is surrounded by a species of open fence of sloping palisade along portions of the side to prevent the 'planes from slipping overboard in event of faulty landings with a small navigating bridge which disappears flush with the flight deck when flying is in progress. Smoke from the fires is discharged either from orifices at the side of the deck or through funnels along the ship's side near the water line.

She carries 1,100 officers and men, including a Royal Air Force personnel of about 120. She houses in her capacious hangars single-seater fighters, single-seater 'Darts' for the torpedo work, also Blackburn 'fleet spotters' and Fairey 3 P.S. employed for reconnaissance duties and artillery observation. It is a great mix-up of rival services working harmoniously together. The observers are naval officers and telegraphist air gunners with naval ratings.

Of the actual pilots thirty per cent are officers of the Royal Air Force and the others naval officers holding temporary commissions in the Royal Air Force.

As the huge carrier steams into action, head into the wind, the naval captain occupies a small platform on the starboard side of the flight deck whence he controls the speed and direction of the ship. An air force wing commander occupies a similar platform on the opposite side of the deck wherefrom he controls the flight of air craft.

An eye-witness described the action of the vessel in a sham battle.

A young flying officer with a rather bored expression just raised his hand for the pilot to start off his engine. A bell tinkled and up shot the lift with an aircraft from the hangar to the flight deck. Off she shot into the blue—completely airborne after seemingly running only a few feet along the deck. A string of 'fly catchers,' shot into the air in quick succession from another flight deck beneath 'Darts' carrying torpedoes appeared on deck quickly and shot into the air where they formed in V formation, and disappeared in the sky. A half hour later the carrier was attacked. The engine room was called upon to increase speed from six to twenty-nine knots and back again, imposing a tremendous strain on man and machinery.

Meanwhile the ship zig-zagged, but the torpedoes dropped from diving aircraft came faster. Of the six fired, four hit vital spots. Had it been real war fighting machines and anti-aircraft fire might have offered protection.

As each machine touched the deck a landing party dashed forward and grabbed it, and within a few seconds the wings were folded and it had been shot down the lift below. There was not a hitch in the hurry throughout the whole proceedings.

Spiders That Spin Silk

A colony of spiders that spin silk for use in scientific instruments is kept by a woman at Tatsfield, near Westerham, England.

This silken thread is used for fixing the centre of lenses in microscopes, range-finders, and other delicate instruments. The scratch of a diamond, which most nearly approaches the geometrical definition of a line—length without breadth—is thick by comparison.

Spider-silk threads have been used for many years. The threads are wound on a card from which the centre has been cut, and the spider will go on spinning almost indefinitely once the thread has been caught. It consists of minute jets of liquid squirted from the gland of the spider, which solidify on exposure to air. Even this thin thread, scarcely visible to the eye, is too thick for some instruments and has to be split into four sections, a task that requires great steadiness of hand.

Better Than Hostels.

A new system of 'homes' for sightless girls is being tried out by the National Institute for the Blind in England.

Formerly these girls in the institute's care have been accommodated in hostels, with a matron in charge. But in such circumstances it is very poor.

Now, however, a new idea is gaining favor. It is that a smaller number of blind girls should be allotted to one house, in which they have a bedchamber, bath, and a room which is the occupant's own for the rest of her life. She can entertain friends there and arrange it to suit herself.

Blind Babies' Jazzy Band.

Tiny inmates of the Sunshine Homes for Blind Babies in England have their own jazz band, led by a nurse playing the piano. They also take part in drill, dancing, and games.

Heavy Smokers.

Britain's heaviest smokers are said to be soldiers and outdoor workers. English women are heavier smokers than the women of any other nation.

WORLD'S HALF-WAY HOUSE.

Royal Botanic Gardens Serve Useful Purpose.

The Royal Botanic Gardens are not only beautiful but are extremely useful, says an Old Country paper, and that while their beauty is enjoyed only by Londoners and visitors, their usefulness extends all over the world. Take the case of chaulmoogra-oil, used extensively in the cure and relief of leprosy. Kew Gardens have been largely instrumental in introducing chaulmoogra into foreign countries.

Specimens of chaulmoogra (or whatever plant happens to be the subject for study at the moment) are secured from abroad and grown at Kew. More plants are raised from the original specimens, and when the time is ripe they are shipped to other countries in small portable greenhouses called warden cases.

In 1639 the Countess of Chinchon, wife of the Viceroy of Peru, brought back with her to Europe samples of the bark of a tree which had been used successfully to cure her of a fever. The remedy used was quinine, and hence the quinine-yielding bark has been called chinchona, or Peruvian bark.

In 1858 Clements Markham was sent out from Kew to South America to secure seeds and living specimens of chinchona. The Bolivians were so hostile to the project that they attempted to destroy the plants which Markham secured by pouring boiling water through the ventilation holes in the warden cases.

Markham, however, succeeded in getting some seeds to Kew, and three years later a crop of 10,000 plants had been raised. These were shipped to India, and formed the basis of the present vast Himalayan plantations.

In a similar way Para rubber seedlings, obtained from South America in 1870, were cultivated at Kew and subsequently sent out to Ceylon and Singapore.

By the agency of Kew Gardens tea was introduced to Natal and the West Indies, and Liberian coffee to the West Indies and Ceylon. Cocoa, the cocaine-yielding plant, was introduced to Ceylon, where it is now extensively cultivated.

Not long ago a query was dealt with concerning the suitability of South African palm kernels for carrying into cork buttons, and the West Indian Government was advised a year or two ago upon the value of a certain pithy stem as a razor stop.

The Kew authorities are frequently called upon in connection with post-mortem examinations arising out of poisoning cases, and at the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, Kew was able to expose the fraud of a vendor who was selling what he alleged to be the 'Rose of Resurrection,' the immortal flower of South Africa. A close inquiry revealed that his specimens came from the Mediterranean!

ENGLAND THE MUSIC MAKER.

British Instruments Go to Every Civilized Country.

"The English are called an unmusical nation, but England makes the music of the world." This statement was made by Lieut.-Col. R. H. Tatton, the organizing director of the Federation of British Musical Industries.

British band and orchestral instruments," said Col. Tatton, "go to every civilized country, and there are famous orchestras all over the world in which British-made instruments are used.

"We also excel in the engraving of the plates from which music is printed. This was almost entirely a Continental trade before the war, but work as good in quality and as inexpensive as anything of the kind which is made on the Continent is now produced in this country, and music engraving is becoming a British industry.

"We export as many gramophones and gramophone records as all the rest of the world. Germany is a good customer for our gramophones and records, and Italy buys more gramophones and records from us than she manufactures herself."—Tit-Bits.

Sir James Barrie's Secret.

Sir James Barrie was a testotaller and a non-smoker—originally. In his early days he wrote a story which ran round the world and was called "My Lady Nicotine." An enterprising tobaccoist felt there were possibilities of advertisement there, and wrote to Sir James Barrie and asked what was the original of the "Arcadian Mixture."

Sir James knew the names of no tobacco manufacturers, but going for a walk he saw a little advertisement of a certain mixture, and he wrote at once and said that the Arcadian mixture was that mixture. Its fame was made, and, as its fame was made, for very shame Sir James Barrie took to the pipe that night and he has kept it to ever since.

Aborigines Increasing Slightly.

Full-blooded Aborigines in Australia increased slightly in number during 1927. It is revealed in the census which has been completed by the Commonwealth statistician. The census, however, is based to some extent on estimates, owing to the difficulty of making an absolute count, and the records are therefore approximate. The numbers of full-blooded aborigines in Australia is set down at 69,236, compared with 72,000 in 1926.

Britain's Smallest House.

Carnarvonshire boasts the smallest house in Britain. It stands on the quay at Conwy, and is built on the back of the old town wall. Its front measures 72 inches, its depth 100 inches, while its height is 123 inches. It consists of two rooms. Until a few years ago it was occupied by a man who stood 6 feet 3 inches.

Killers of the Skies.

Peregrine falcons will frequently pursue and strike down pigeons and other victims for the mere sake of killing; they are capable of overtaking the fastest birds.

MRS. NORMAN WALTER BROWN

On Saturday, June 9, there passed away, in the Ross Memorial Hospital at Lindsay, Jennie Richards Fanning, beloved wife of the late Dr. Walter Norman Brown, of Toronto. Mrs. Brown was born in the Village of Welcome, near Port Hope, and was one of the eight daughters of the late Moore and Augusta Fanning. She received her education at the Port Hope High School and the Ottawa Normal School. After teaching a few years in Orangeville she became the wife of Walter Norman Brown of that town, but afterward of Toronto. Both Dr. and Mrs. Brown were members of the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church and were well known in that part of the city. After the death of her husband ten years ago, Mrs. Brown moved to Lindsay, to be near the other members of her family.

SCREEN CLASEIC AT LOW PRICES

MONSTER PICTORIZATION OF "BEN HUR" NOW WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL

Everywhere "Ben Hur" goes it is seen by record-breaking crowds that include many of the older folk and others who rarely attend a theatre, yet it delights the young people, too, with its fascinating story and its many thrills. The sea battle and the chariot race dwarf anything ever previously shown on the screen, while there are countless other episodes rich in dramatic interest and heart appeal.

Hundreds of Port Hopers were loud in their praise of "Ben Hur" when it was here in January; now those who missed the greatest of all photoplays can see it, and at lower prices--25c and 50c for all seats. It will be shown at the Royal on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, beginning at 8.30.

Of all the photoplays ever produced, the greatest undoubtedly is "Ben Hur", a four million dollar screen presentation of the immortal book and play familiar to millions the world over. Filmed in the actual scenes of the story, it brings all the glamor and appeal of the original, with the added thrill of actually showing on a tremendous scale what the novel could only describe and the drama suggest. The director, technical staff and cast, spent four years making this wonderful production and that their efforts were well worth while, has been proved by its complete success.

Embarrassing Questions

When do we get our holidays. A bricklayer said to a foreman on a new job: "I'd like to work here but I can't find a place to park my car."

The foreman replied: "I guess you won't do. This is a high class job and we want only bricklayers who have chauffeurs."
