

SEEDING IN THE WEST PROGRESSES

Planting Likely To Be Finished By End of Week

Seeding was general today throughout the prairie provinces and with the forecast for continued moderate temperatures the outlook pointed to completion of operations in many sections by the end of the week.

Rainfall in Manitoba over the week end was not sufficiently heavy to interrupt work and, according to reports received farmers were again busy in the fields today.

When seeding of the 1928 crop was finished early this month the wheat was already showing above the ground. A farmer in the Vauxhall district of Alberta, who was the first this season to report his grain showing above the ground, brought reports of similar progress in sections of Southern Manitoba.

Ideal seeding weather is promised for Saskatchewan and Manitoba for another two days at least, while scattered showers are forecast for Alberta.

KING EDWARD VII ATTENDED BALL

And Danced In Court House Where Libel Suit is Being Tried

King Edward VII danced in the court house where the trial of the action for $50,000 damages for alleged libel brought by General Sir Arthur Currie against F. W. Wilson of the Port Hope Guide and W. T. R. Preston has been in progress this week. That was in 1860 when, as Prince of Wales, the ruler who was later to be known as "Edward the Peacemaker," was visiting the Dominion. The court house was built in 1857 and formally opened in 1860.

A dance was held in honor of the Prince of Wales at the new court house and he graced the ball with his presence.

The building at first was partly a fort for the repelling of possible invaders and partly a courthouse for the trial of actions at law, and was regarded as a triumph of architecture. The foundations of the building are all of eight feet in solid masonry and the situation is a commanding one enabling old muzzle loading cannon to sweep the approaches to the Canadian shore.

New $100,000 Claude P. Briggs memorial swimming pool, Cleveland, will be formally opened in a few weeks.

Y.P. LEAGUE ENJOYS TALK

St. Paul's Y.P. Hear Interesting Chalk Talk By Rev. P. T. Meek

The feature of the Young Peoples' meeting conducted at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Monday evening was the very interesting talk given by Rev. P. T. Meek, who supplied in the pulpit here Sunday. Rev. Meek has a thorough knowledge on the subject and his talk was much enjoyed by the large number present. Mr. L. Curtin, president of the society, presided at the meeting.

Following the opening of the meeting by a hymn and the reading of the Scripture Lesson by Miss Roberta Low, Rev. Meek led in the prayer. Chas. Doney, prominent local soloist, chose an excellent number when he sang "Perfect Love," the words of which were written by Cyril V. Brown of Port Hope. He was accompanied by Miss Gladys Black, A.T.C.M.

Miss Kathleen Beckett delighted the meeting with a fine violin solo "Russian Lullaby." She was accompanied by Miss Jean Dickinson. Miss Audrey Box rendered an appropriate vocal solo with Miss Black as accompanist, and Miss Sybil Hogg gave a delightful piano solo.

The chalk talk, capably presented by Rev. Meek, was greatly enjoyed by the leaguers. The speaker and cartoonist is keenly interested in the work and his drawings considerably increased the value of the message. Dainty refreshments were served at the close.

OAK HILL LADY PASSED AWAY

Mrs. Wm. McMillan, Lifelong Resident of This District, Died Monday

The death occurred Monday at Oak Hill of Mrs. Wm. McMillan, who had been ailing for over a year. Deceased was Angelia Kirkpatrick daughter of the late Sam Kirkpatrick and was born at Garden Hill in 1850, where she lived until her marriage to Wm. McMillan and since that time has resided at Oak Hill.

She is survived by an only daughter, Mrs. Walter Potts of Elizabethville and a son, Sam, at home. Her husband predeceased her on March 17th, having lived practically in the same place since his birth in 1847.

She was a Presbyterian until the Church Union. Her remains will be laid to rest tomorrow, May 2nd, in the Port Hope Union Cemetery.

HEARD ON THE STREET

May Day! April showers should be a thing of the past now, but are they? Only thirty days or so till those perfect days of June. Say ladies, come to the Bowling Club's Euchre on Thursday evening. You are assured of an enjoyable time.

Brock Leonard, son of the station agent at Yarker who was seriously injured when a portion of a wall fell on him during a disastrous fire which visited the village Sunday, is known in Port Hope, having worked at the local C.N.R. depot a few months ago. At one time, his father was agent at the former Canadian Northern station on Hope Street.

Fire which broke out shortly after five o'clock in the tannery of C. J. Miller and Sons, Limited, of Orillia, totally destroyed the building and equipment, only the stone superstructure remaining. The firm which has 25 hands employed had only on Saturday shipped out $16,000 worth of leather, the loss is fairly well covered by insurance. Pending the arrival of the adjusters the extent of the loss is not known.

All the stores in Trenton were closed on Monday afternoon when the funeral took place of the late Robert White, who was the Principal of the high school. The cadets in uniform, with the girl and boy students of the schools, joined in the procession. At the King St. United Church an impressive service was held. Interment in Trenton Cemetery. The cortege was one of the largest seen in the town for years.

A fish and game preserve may be established at the marsh south of Bowmanville. J. Luke Morden, a well known Bowmanville manufacturer, has communicated, it is said, with Hon. Lincoln Goldie, Provincial Secretary with reference to it. If carried out it will be one of the best preserves in Canada as the location is a desirable one.

LEG BROKEN BY KICKING HORSE

Joseph Stephens of Newcastle Was Removed to Hospital Here Today

Joseph Stephens of Newcastle, sustained a broken leg today when he was kicked by a horse and the injured man was removed to the Port Hope Hospital this afternoon by A. W. George and Son's ambulance.

It seems that Mr. Stephens was engaged in unharnessing a team of horses and when standing in the rear of one of the team, he was forcibly kicked in the right leg by one of the animals. Dr. J. A. Butler of Newcastle attended him.

ELIZABETHVILLE WINS DEBATE

Visitors Are Conquerors in Heated Debate Held Here On Monday Night

Elizabethville Young People's Society came to Port Hope last (Monday) night with their debating team and returned victors over the local United Church Y.P.S. team.

The visitors were represented by Misses Ruth Launder and Edna Mercer who were opposed by Miss Hazel Wright and John Moon. Rev. F. W. Anderson kindly acted as chairman and called on Rev. J. F. Lane, who came with the visitors for the opening prayer. The judges were Mrs. T. T. Sowden, Miss K. Staples and Mr. W. A. McCarthy.

Miss Ruth Launder, who attended High School here when she lived at Plainville, and is consequently well known here, was the first speaker on the affirmative, and announced the subject to be "Resolved that steam is of greater value to mankind than electricity." Miss Launder took the broadest possible view of steam to include vapour. In this way she cleverly showed that rain and snow were a result of steam and this gave her many points of which she made great use.

Miss Hazel Wright was the first negative speaker, had a direct and forceful delivery, giving a multitude of uses for electricity to show how it a great help to modern industry, pleasure, health and so on, concluding by showing how useful it is in eliminating useless citizens through the electric chair, which plays a great part in the nation's prison death to the south of us.

Miss Mercer, though having no previous experience made an excellent and impressive address.

Mr. John Moon, second negative speaker, late president of the local society, added many reasons to those already given by Miss Wright, especially stressing how it played a great part in the farm work thus becoming the backbone of the country.

Mr. J. Y. Kellough acted as critic and gave a few well directed remarks in commenting on the speeches of those who had spoken.

After Mr. Anderson announced that Elizabethville had won, Mr. John Moon, on behalf of the local society wished them every success in the district series.

Refreshments and a social chat concluded a very enjoyable evening.

Friday night Franklin Bannister and Lawrence Dunbar in debating the same subject with Clayton Butters and Beulah Ames of Plainville, defeated them and brought the honor to Garden Hill society by showing that electricity is of more use to man kind.

W. T. R. PRESTON CLAIMS ATTACK WAS MADDEST PROPOSAL MADE

Addresses to Jury are Made and Justice Rose Charged Jury This Morning—Currie Asks For $50,000; Don't Give Him a Dollar, Proclaims Regan.

After four hours and a half deliberation, the jury, sitting at Cobourg in the $50,000 libel action instigated by Sir Arthur Currie against W. T. R. Preston and F. W. Wilson, awarded the plaintiff $500 damages.

The addresses to the jury by the plaintiff and defendants in connection with the $50,000 libel action against W. T. R. Preston and F. W. Wilson of the Port Hope Guide, were completed at Cobourg Monday and Justice Rose charged the jury this morning. The court room was packed to the doors with every available inch occupied.

Statements made in the article that caused the sensational trial were mild compared to the remarks of the article's author, W. T. R. Preston, when addressing the jury in his own defence.

Frightful Loss of Life After several other attacks, he ended his address with a burst of eloquence. "I therefore impeach Sir Arthur Currie before this bar, on behalf of the widows who lost their husbands, the mothers who lost their sons, for a needless, heedless loss of human life in this useless attack on Mons."

Frank Regan, counsel for Mr. Wilson and Mr. Preston delivered their addresses first, and were followed by W. N. Tilley, K.C., for Sir Arthur Currie. Not much of the tremendous mass of evidence that has been accumulated at the trial was referred to in any detail by any of the counsel. The defendants stood upon the assertion that what had been printed in the Port Hope Guide, in the article entitled "Mons" was true in substance and in fact; while the counsel for the plaintiff contended that this article was a libel, and that that portion of it which referred to the Canadian soldiers having their rifles trained on the headquarters staff was "the meanest thing that could be said by a mean man."

In the complained of article, Mr. Regan scouted the notion that there was any literal meaning to the expression: "It was the last day, and the last hour—almost the last minute"; nor did the defendants admit that the term "Commander in Chief" noted in the following phrase: "When the Commander in Chief and the Canadian Headquarters Staff conceived the mad idea that it would be a fine thing to say that the Canadians had fired the last shot in the war"—had any reference to Sir Arthur Currie. The issue between Mr. Wilson and Sir Arthur Currie was that Wilson said there was an order for an attack on Mons, while the Corps Commander denied that such had been given. Counsel contended that Sir Arthur had known about the armistice prior to the operations that resulted in the entry into Mons, and also had a knowledge of the general collapse of the Central Powers.

Counsel asked the jury to believe the reports, in view of the fact that they were written on the spot, "in contrast to the verbal evidence, which came ten years later. Ashamed to Face the World"

The war diaries had grouped casualties for the last few days prior to the cessation of hostilities, said Mr. Regan, "because these men were ashamed to face the world and say that such casualties had occurred in the last hours of the war."

Mr. Regan complained about Sir Arthur Currie and Major General J. H. MacBrien "getting into the public press" with statements relevant to the case before it came to trial. This he contended was contempt of court. Mr. Regan dwelt on the rank of the defence witnesses. They were privates and the jury was asked to consider the situation where privates were asked to give evidence against their corps commander.

The records obtained from Ottawa were subjected to considerable criticism by Mr. Regan who said they were "all wrong, all improper and all incorrect." "I am going to ask you, gentlemen, to pay no attention to these documents from Ottawa at all." He emphasized that the motive actuating his client was to ensure that the men got their share of the glory of Mons. "That was all that Wilson, brave man that he is, asked for—that the men be given their share of the glory." Who was the traitor? he demanded. The man who would disobey the orders and not have the troops attack three quarters of an hour before the armistice became effective?

"No wonder Sir Arthur Currie said 'Poor Price' for it was in that attack (on the Bois du Rapis) that Pte. Price was killed at 10.57," declared counsel.

This article had been reproduced elsewhere. "Here is the Ottawa Citizen who publishes the same story. But he picks on the Port Hope Guide. Is that fair? Why didn't he pick on some one his own size? Why didn't he go down to Ottawa and fight it out there?" asked Mr. Regan.

"What we've said is true. What we said about the parade, about the guns trained on this crowd at 11 o'clock is true. Sir Arthur Currie asks for $50,000," said Mr. Regan. "Don't you give him a dollar, for a dollar means about $15,000 in costs. Bring in a verdict for the defendants for usually the costs go to the verdict. We tried to do our duty to the living and the dead and because we had the temerity to say it, Sir Arthur comes and demands $50,000. Charges Ten Years Old"

W. T. R. Preston, who is conducting his own case, followed Mr. Regan in addressing the jury. He said he realized that this was a trial without precedent in the world, but when he wrote the article, he believed it to be in the public interest to do so. He found no fault with objections by Mr. Tilley, counsel for plaintiff, nor with His Lordship's decisions. Evidence had been adduced which supported, not part of, but every word of the editorial, he said. The matter was not new nor was it of defendant's seeking. It was ten years old. It leaked out in a speech by Sir Sam Hughes in the parliamentary halls in Ottawa. Public life made strange bedfellows and for 50 years Mr. Preston had been politically opposed to Sir Sam, although enjoying his personal friendship. The base of the article complained of was the speech of Sir Sam Hughes, nine years ago. Mr. Preston read a portion of it having reference to the late Minister: He was Minister of Militia; he busied himself with every phase of the war; was in England and in France collecting evidence that would aid him in administration of his department. He had peculiar knowledge of his responsibilities. And this public man got up in the House of Commons and made that statement regarding General Currie.

Mr. Preston contended that Sir Arthur ought to have met his accuser in some form. But there was no evidence of his having done so. Waits Nine Long Years

Nine long years had passed; Sir Arthur had admitted that here and there it had been a great trouble to him. But what had he done? What channels had he opened? The humblest citizen of this country could make application to Parliament for some opportunity to justify himself. Had he even asked for that? His answer three days ago was no. Would the jury not have asked the chance to challenge Sam Hughes in his lifetime, as a liar? Sir Arthur Currie had all the prestige of a knight; of a commander of the army, yet he had sought no means to deny the charges. But nine years after he had taken action against unassuming persons like himself and Wilson of the Port Hope Guide. Sir Arthur could have sought an enquiry, but for his own reasons he chose not to do so, said Mr. Preston. He would not enter the lists with Sir Sam Hughes, who had pledged his honor as a member of Parliament and as a soldier that the story was true. However, Sir Arthur came to court nine years later, after the public had accepted the story as true. There was a responsibility on Sir Arthur which he could not shirk and which he must bear. "Having said nothing and done nothing in Sir Sam Hughes lifetime, he incurred an awful responsibility," said Mr. Preston.

"The world had no use for a coward nor had anyone else. It seemed strange that he had taken no action when his peer was alive and witnesses were still alive. It was bad enough not to tackle Sir Sam Hughes when he lived. There was enough in the newspapers and in public talk to justify Sir Arthur going to the Government for an enquiry. Parliament was always willing to set great public questions right, and it could have been done without the enormous costs that accompany litigation in this country; consequently the responsibility and blame must rest on his shoulders."

Documents Missing

The jury had heard the evidence and the official reports, sometimes twenty four hours after Mons and the events incident to it, said Mr. Preston. How were all these reports made up? he asked. The man who wrote these reports wrote them for the historian and in the departments of all the allied capitals such reports should be deposited. Where were such documents relating to Mons? "I have a right to ask that question and we have asked the officials of the department. They are not there," continued Mr. Preston, "and it looks strange that they are not there. Documents have been produced and the departmental officers have given all assistance, but the documents wanted by the defendants—the reports of the captains, to the colonels, from the colonels to the brigadiers, were not available." It was for the jury to ask the answer, to question why said Mr. Preston.

Mad Proposal

"I say with all the responsibility my words can convey, that I don't think there was a more mad proposal made," said Mr. Preston, "than the capture of Mons. Mons at that time was invested with a German army. We know that in Mons was the most complete machine gun emplacements Germany had ever prepared."

Mr. Preston pictured the thrones of Europe crumbling like packs of cards, with the Kaiser dethroned and fleeing for his life. "Did General Currie not know all this, that the time had come to cease losing lives? No ordinary person could come to the conclusion other than that he knew."

Knowing that, Sir Arthur Currie started for Mons to engage a city that he knew was strongly prepared to resist the British army, Mr. Preston continued. "He flew in the face of all the traditions of the British army which has never attempted attacks in extreme stress. The Canadians could have engaged in an enveloping movement and the Germans would have got out. They would have left a rear guard action of sacrifice troops where one person could hold one thousand at bay."

Sir Arthur knew he would have to face that. He knew there had already been 215,000 Canadian casualties in the war.

"Good God, was this not enough? Is the appetite of the God of war never to be satisfied? Were there not enough to satisfy this monster in France," Mr. Preston asked.

The Toronto Star had quoted Gen. Currie: "God, wouldn't I like to see the Canadians at them again." "Would any other British leader say that he would like to see the soldiers attack the Boche again?" he asked.

"Yet this master tactician, this war lord, trained in a real estate and insurance office, wanted to see the Canadian troops at them again," said Mr. Preston.

Attacks Gen. MacBrien

Regarding General MacBrien, Mr. Preston said Canada went to war so that the world should not be ruled by German militarism. "But God help Canada if this country were ever ruled by militarism dictated by General MacBrien."

"I say of General Currie there should have been no life lost after he got the information that he did from General Horne on the ninth of November," declared Mr. Preston.

There was no need of risking human life when the Germans were fleeing for their lives, "neither able to give or refuse battle." There was no need to press with the American army advancing upon the Meuse, he submitted.

"It was madness, cursed—something else, on the night of November 9, to attack a fortified city," said Mr. Preston.

Where did the dead come from who were found in Mons? asked Mr. Preston. He charged General Currie as the man responsible for carrying out an attack on Mons. Even at Balacava there was a written order for the charge of the Noble Six Hundred but there was not even a scrap of paper with the word Mons on it.

Mr. Tilley confined most of his address to explaining the technicalities of the issues at stake. Mr. Wilson had given evidence, he said, but Mr. Preston had not. Mr. Preston had declared that he had never seen such an exhibition as General MacBrien gave on Saturday, and, as added, "perhaps this was what actuated Preston not to go in the box himself."

There was nothing to show that there had been a "deliberate waste of life at Mons." It had been shown that one man, Private Price, was the only man killed on November 11, and this casualty had been sustained from a sniper's bullet—a circumstance that might have taken place at any part of the front.

"The article was mean, but the conduct of the trial was meaner," declared counsel. "There is not one statement in that article with a dirty sting in it that has been justified," said Mr. Tilley. "Sir Arthur Currie was a general carrying out his orders and he carried them out with a saving of human life."

"Could anything be meaner than this," asked Mr. Tilley, "than to say to the fathers and mothers of Canada—whom Mr. Preston claims to represent—that there was a loss of life for the purpose of glorifying the officers?"

"What did defendant say? Just what any coward would say—that there are newspapers with more money than I had. Why didn't you sue them?" That was to say, continued counsel, a man could dip his pen in ink and write a libel, knowing that other newspapers would republish it. Then he expected to sit back in his chair while the man libelled went after somebody else.

Mr. Tilley concluded by saying he was proud that General Currie did his part in all these operations, and also subsequent to 1916, the year following which Sir Sam Hughes had said that with the proper safeguarding of life then there would have been no necessity to send another Canadian soldier to France.

CARE OF APIARY IN THE SPRING

Proper Attention in May Increases Yield of Honey Later On

Those keeping bees can save themselves considerable worry and extra work in the busy season of early July if they will give the colonies a little care during the time dandelions and fruit trees are in blossom. Besides the saving of time later, proper attention in May increases the yield of honey appreciably. When the dandelion or fruit trees begin to bloom freely, examine every colony in the apiary for these three reasons. First, clip the wings of all the laying queens, so that if the colony swarms later, you do not have to climb trees to hive the swarm. When a colony swarms and the wings of the queen are clipped, it is an easy matter to catch the queen near the entrance of the hive. Then place another hive where the old colony stood and place on the new hive all the supers from the old colony, which have just swarmed. By this time the swarm will be returning to the old location, on which is now placed a hive body of dry combs or full sheets of foundation and all supers from the old colony. Now let the clipped queen run in at the entrance with the returning bees and your swarm is hived. Open the colony which swarmed and select one comb on which there is one or more plump queen cells. Stand this comb down by the side of the hive carefully and then take out two thirds of the remaining combs and shake all the bees off the combs in front of the entrance of the new hive, in which the swarm has just entered. Now replace the combs, including the one which has the queen cells, into the old hive body, replace the cover and take the complete hive to another part of the apiary. This manipulation will usually stop all further swarming, if enough supers are given to the bees before they become crowded.

The second manipulation is to examine each and every colony for American foulbrood. Every beekeeper should be able to recognize this trouble and when it is found the safest and best method of treatment is to destroy the contents of all infected colonies by burning, after the bees have been killed. Prevent robbing and do not exchange combs between colonies unless certain this disease is absent. A bulletin on bee diseases can be obtained from the office of the Agricultural Representative, Port Hope. The third manipulation to be made during the dandelion and fruit blossom period is a very important one and will help very materially increasing the honey crop and retarding swarming. This manipulation, although of vital importance, takes but little time and will pay a good dividend later on in the season. After the wings of the queens have been clipped and the colonies have been examined for American foulbrood at the beginning of dandelion or fruit blossom give each good strong colony of bees a second hive body of either combs or full sheets of foundation. Do not use a queen excluder, but allow the queen to use both hive bodies. If the colony is very strong and the weather is fine during this period, give these colonies a third hive body of full sheets of comb foundation. This manipulation means that you will have very powerful colonies when the main flow comes later and they will not be so inclined to swarm as other colonies which have not had the extra room.

If the weather is unsuitable during the dandelion and fruit blossom period many colonies will starve or become so weakened that they will not be strong enough to store honey when the clover flow begins. Remember, it is the strong profitable colonies that starve and these are the colonies that should have your full attention. Sugar syrup, one part water and one part sugar, will tide your colonies over the critical period and more than return the expenditure. Many a crop of honey has been lost, because the beekeepers kept hoping for better weather and a flow which did not materialize. You cannot have a colony at full gathering strength when the main flow comes if there is any slackening of brood-rearing from now to the end of the main light honey flow. Watch the stores.

When clover commences to yield honey it is time to use the queen excluder if extracted honey is being produced. When the excluder is brought into use the queen should be placed in the bottom hive body with the excluder directly on top of this hive body. Leave the other one or two hive bodies as they were except to reverse them if there are two hive bodies above the excluder. If only one extra hive body was used earlier you should give those colonies another, below the one already used, directly over the excluder. Supers should be added each week of the main flow. You should have not less than three extracting supers, for each colony run for extracted honey and at least four comb honey supers, if colonies are producing comb honey.

If your colonies swarm, treat them as outlined and you should have no further trouble from secondary swarms.

Have you registered your apiary this year? All apiaries, even if only one colony, must be registered on or before the 30th of April of each year. Do not neglect this if you have not already sent it in to the Provincial Apiarist, O.A.C., Guelph. You can obtain an application for certificate of registration from the Agricultural Representative's office, Port Hope.

THE BANNER OF ST. GEORGE

It comes from misty ages,
The Banner of England's might,
The blood red cross of the brave St. George,

That burns on a field of white;
It speaks of the deathless heroes,
On fame's page enrolled,
And bids great England ne'er forget
The glorious deeds of old.

O'er many a clod of battle,
That Banner has floated wide,
It shone, like a star o'er the valiant hearts

That dashed the Armada's pride;
Forever amid the thunders
The sailor could do or die,
While tongues of flame leaped forth below

And the flag of St George was high.

O ne'er the flag bejoved
Unfurled in a strife unblest,
But ever give strength to the righteous arm

And hope to the hearts oppressed;
It, says through the passing ages—
"Be brave if your cause is right,"
Like the soldier saint whose cross of red

Still burns on your banner white.

Great race whose Empire of splendor

Has dazzled a wondering world;
May the flag that floats o'er thy wild domains

Be long to all winds unfurled;
Three crosses in concord blended,
The Banner of Britain's might;
But the central gem of the ensign fair

Is the cross of the dauntless knight.

THE GUIDE STORY

"Is this a hoax, Firefly?" asked John, trying to see the girl's eyes and failing. "I shall go in and see Miss Granby—I don't trust you."

"Sorry, doc, but it won't be any good. Miss Granby too, has gone to bed. I am the only sitting up representative this evening. Besides for other reasons, even if they were both up, I shouldn't if I were you."

"What on earth are you up to now?"

"How horribly suspicious you are doc! I should be sorry to be your wife—if you ever have one. I merely thought that as the new man's wife called today—your rival's better half—with some bigwig or other and Miss Ransome seemed rather smitten with her, and tacitly promised support for her husband and all that sort of thing, you know, I fancied that medical etiquette—you see, it won't look well, really it won't, if you seem to push yourself forward just now. It would look as if you feared—well, you know just what I mean."

"I wish you were some ten years younger then I would treat you to a good shaking," muttered John. "I believe you are up to your old humbugging dodges. New man! Why, I never heard that he had a wife, and what's more, I'm pretty sure he's set against this part—there's not enough work for two. Besides I met Miss Ransome on the Mans-ford road this afternoon; therefore, on the face of it, she can't have been at home to receive visitors."

"Suppose when she got in she found these visitors waiting for her," suggested Firefly, with a sigh expressive of intense weariness. "You need not believe me unless you like, doc. Go up and ask at the door. Really, with your questions, you are keeping me shivering here a perfectly unconscionable time."

"Good night," said John, and without another word he turned away down the park drive.

Firefly shrugged her shoulders, and made a grimace after him.

"How wild Hal would be," she murmured. Then she re-entered the drawing room, her pleasure in remembering how she had outwitted a man who considered himself proof against deception, alternately heightened and damped by speculating on what Hal would think on the matter

CHAPTER XVII

Miss Granby Explains

John Forrester's naturally hasty temper was not improved the following day when on calling in at Woodlands Station to make final arrangements for Jack Wood's departure to his training ship, he discovered that the eleven thirty five a.m. train to London contained no passengers from the Manor House.

The station master volunteered the information that Miss Ransome, with Miss Fenton, had left by the ten five a.m. and John rode away, undecided whether to sulk with dignity till his usual day for seeing Miss Granby came round or to satisfy his curiosity—which, by the way, he called anxiety—and see for himself how long his patient was to be left to the tender mercies of her maid.

Before the doctor had been seated a minute in Miss Granby's bright little sitting room, in which every ray of sunshine was caught and held by bowls of daffodils, he was handed a small, dainty, scented and twisted note by the old lady.

"The dear child asked me to give you this, doctor, the moment you arrived," she said, "Although I reminded her that today was not your usual day for visiting me, she seemed to think that you would come. She is bright and clever and very likely she asked you to look in and see, knowing that I should feel a little lonely. She wanted particularly to explain the reason of her little deception last night. Before you read it, doctor, I should prefer telling you that I seriously reproved her for having led you to believe what was not accurate. I know she did it from the best of motives, fancying that I was a little over-tired and agitated, and wishing to talk over certain important details with my great niece; still, I made her quite understand that she should not have implied that we were going to bed. It was wrong of her, and she saw my point of view, and promised to write and explain matters to you. I trust, doctor, that from this you will not judge dear Firefly to be habitually untruthful."

The doctor, as he untwisted the note, smiled somewhat enigmatically, but Miss Granby accepted it as according to the wishes of her own heart, and with a sense of relief, took up her knitting.

If John smiled again a trifle scornfully, it was not a matter for wonder for Firefly had worded her apology somewhat characteristically and had Miss Granby read the production she might not have felt so satisfied with the result of her little scolding. It was as follows:

Game Postponed

Against the wishes of the Toronto management, Jack Dunn, Oriole boss, called off Monday's game between the Leafs and Birds. "Threatening weather" was the reason given, but it was a better day than Sunday when the teams clashed in a double bill and drew 7000 fans. Dunn held the whip hand, as the Baltimore moguls had the say in the matter and Bill O'Hara and his hirelings had to cool their heels and amuse themselves as best they could.

O'Hara and Fred Burchell visited Oriole Park and were ready to tell the Leafs to come out when hostilities were called off. The game will be included in a twin bill the next time the Leafs visit Baltimore.

BOXING

Sharkey Wins

After having talked and fiddled his way out of the main heavyweight picture for this year, Jack Sharkey suddenly came to life last night and knocked out Jack Delaney, the one time "Rapist of the North" in 1 minute and 13 seconds of the first round.

Snarling and vicious, Sharkey leaped at his lighter foe at the tap of the gong and had him punch drunk in less than 30 seconds and on the floor for the first time. Delaney took the count of ten from as crushing a right hand uppercut as has landed in any ring or on any jaw for several moons.

SOFTBALL

File's Chances Good

With the opening of the softball season less than a week away, softball fans are eagerly waiting for the opening game to see what players are being lined up on the various club's roster. A summary of the proposed line ups have already been given in these columns regarding the Sanitary, 1927 champions, and the Bankers, 1927 runners-up.

Last season the Nicholson File finished in third position and the team's chances of finishing in first division this season are exceptionally bright. Last year, the File aggregation started off like a house afire and clinched the first two games by large scores which resembled cricket figures. The boys stage a daily half hour practice and are rapidly rounding into form. They had a chance last season to create a tie with the Bankers but they were defeated by the Ganeraskas, which was the only game they won.

It is quite likely that Nelson, the southpaw artist and Staples will do the hurling for the Cavan Street bunch, Wakely did the back stepping last year and possibly a new catcher will appear behind the plate. The regular infield will be played and will include Winters, at the initial cushion, Manager Tweed at the key-stone sack and Foote, at the hot corner, with Welch at short. The outfield will be picked from Trawin, Wallace, Beatty, McDonald and Perry and others who have aspirations for positions.

Change Made

A slight change has been made in the schedule of the Port Hope Softball League and the Sanitary-Bankers game scheduled for July 31st has been switched to August 2nd and the Ganeraskas and File contest will be played on July 31st.

Team managers are asked to hand in the list of certificates of players that have already been signed to the Secretary by Friday of this week so that the proposed players may be passed by the executive.

TORONTO SINGER AND GOOD FILMS

At the Royal Theatre tomorrow and Thursday, the Port Hope Tennis club will present as a special attraction Miss Elfrida Boulton, soprano soloist of Toronto. Miss Boulton is a Port Hope Girl who has studied in Europe, and her many friends in town are eager to hear her. She is a delightful singer whose appearance at the Royal will be one of the treats of the season.

The photoplay program, specially selected, will feature Reginald Denry in "That's My Daddy," a really laughable farce which has an added element of heart-appeal due to the clever acting of little Jane LaVerne, who is considered the cutest kid on the screen.

AN ANCIENT LEGACY

Should the judge of the Paris Civil Court when he is called upon to consider an action brought against the State by M. Nicholas Thierry, a retired naval officer, decide in favor of the plaintiff, the equilibrium of France's budget will be greatly upset. M. Thierry is claiming three milliards seven hundred million francs ($148,000,000), representing, with accumulated interest, the fortune left by one of his ancestors, a Venetian merchant in Shakespearean days, which fell into the hands of the French Government.

The story of the amazing inheritance of the Antonio in real life reads like a tale of the Arabian Nights. His name was Jean Thierry. He was born in Chateau Thierry in 1579 and was the son of a humble farmer of the Champagne district.

When sixteen years of age he went to Italy and for several years was a servant at an Inn at Bresbia. There he was noticed by a wealthy Greek merchant named Athanasios Tipladi, who engaged him as a valet.

Later the young Frenchman, who was clever and devoted to his master, became his secretary and toured Europe with him.

One day in a shipwreck he saved his master's life and when Tipladi died at Venice he left all his fortune, his large business and his many ships to young Thierry.

The new "Merchant of Venice" developed the business and amassed great wealth until he died, aged 85. When he died, in 1675, he left a fortune estimated at over five million ducats.

In his will the merchant of Venice, who, since he left France as a boy had never had any news of his family, stipulated that his fortune was to go to "his brothers and their children."

The bank of the Venetian Government was entrusted with the inheritance and the executor of the will, a Signor Moro, went to France to search for the heirs to the Thierry fortune. The executor had not been in France more than a few weeks when he fell the victim to a plot laid by three French finance officials.

They destroyed all official evidence of the inheritors' rights and produced four documents purporting to show that they themselves were the actual heirs to the Thierry millions.

They nearly succeeded in their attempts to deceive the French Government, when they were unmasked and sentenced to death in 1703. They managed to escape, however, and fled to Holland.

It was only seven years later that the question of Thierry's inheritance came up again. Legal proceedings began and went on for years.

It seems that all the Thierry's of France put in claims to the vast fortune. Seven thousand people with the name of Thierry applied to the court, but their claims were dismissed.

After the French revolution the Thierry inheritance, which was still in the Venetian state bank, was brought to France.

M. Thierry has, it is said, spent many years endeavoring to establish that he is the direct descendant of the original French merchant of Venice, and it is said that he has succeeded.

His counsel has been extremely busy studying the enormous dossier of his client's case, which includes hundreds of documents relating to his pedigree.

SHANGHAI'S TRAFFIC PROBLEM.

Sedan Chairs Retain a Hold in This Chinese City.

Shanghai foreign settlement has many curious anomalies in dealing with its traffic problem. Two sedan chairs, relics of a picturesque past, with their 12-foot poles, green-painted windows and spare coolie bearers, continue to find use as the property of two Chinese veterans who refuse to bow before the customs of the age. Fifteen years ago there were hundred of sedan chairs in use; a year ago there were still eight on the streets, but they are now reduced to two.

(62) Quebec.—When the 1923 shipping season opened here April 22, the Canadian Pacific St. Lawrence fleet supplied fifty per cent. of the steamers that docked with S.S. Montclair, Montroyal and Melita. The three ships carried in round figures 2300 immigrants aboard mostly of British stock and destined to farms in the West.

International Advertising Convention and Exposition to be held at Detroit, July 8-12, is already attracting wide notice and will contain under one roof everything relating to organized advertising in every phase. Advertising men from overseas will attend and bookings are being made on Canadian Pacific liners from Great Britain and Europe well ahead of time in view of the large demand for travel that will arise.

Sixty-five miles of salmon fishing in the Cains River, New Brunswick, were enjoyed recently by five anglers from Chicago and the U. S. Middle West and by a party of New York newspapermen, including W. McGehean, internationally known New York Herald-Tribune sports writer. Both parties were staying for about a fortnight in the care of Harry Allen, well known New Brunswick guide. They travelled Canadian Pacific to their fishing destination.

Okanagan.—Word is received from Washington that the Okanagan project, during the last year, had a higher per acre yield of apples and a consequent higher acre return to the grower, than any government irrigation project in the United States. The local project, with 3,567 acres in apples, has a yield of 35,142,750 pounds, or 9,852 pounds to the acre, a yield which brought the growers a return of $1,030,854, or the high record price of $289 an acre. On the Yakima project the average yield was 9,602 pounds to the acre at the rate of $246.16 per acre. The nearest approach to the Washington record was on the Sun river project in Montana, where the average was $153.33 an acre, followed by the Boise project, with a price of $148.

Ottawa.—The Department of Agriculture has issued a report showing how the Canadian "Moth" plane is combating wheat rust—how the Canadian Air Force, the Federal Department of Agriculture and the pathological plant of the Manitoba Agricultural College at Winnipeg are uniting to fight the enemy. The report says: "The work consists mainly in the exposure of slides at different altitudes and at different locations. These aeroplane exposures attempt to collect from altitudes of from 1,000 to 5,000 feet the date of the earliest appearance of rust spores, the region over which they first appear, the rate at which the spore content of the air increases over various regions, the visibility of spores caught at these higher altitudes and the relation of certain environmental and climatic factors to the rate of development and spread of rust. Tightly stoppered bottles are used, containing wooden paddles to which are attached microscopic slides lightly smeared with vaseline. These slides are exposed for 15 minutes at varying altitudes; the slides replaced in the bottles and then returned to the Government laboratory at Winnipeg."

One person was killed and six injured when an interurban car struck an auto near Tiffin, Ohio.
