Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," What a woman that is, that sister-in-law of yours?" said Durand's artist-friend, the graybeard who had been one of the wit-nesses at the double wedding. "That face would be magnificent for Jael or Judith, for Charlotte Corday or Salammbo. That girl is capable of anything strangs or heroic or deadly. She has the tenacity of a Redskin."

Durand smiled a sad incredulous smile.
"Poor child, how little you know her!" he answered. "You clever men are so easily led away by a fancy. Kathleen is one of the gentlest souls I know. She adored her husband, and her grief at his death has turned her a little here," pointing to his fore-head. "But she is incapable of any violent

"She is capable of a great crime in a great cause, as Charlotte Corday was; the gentlest of souls, she, till she took the knife in her hand-to slay him whom she deemed the scourge of her country. I am not led away by fancies, Durand. Faces are open pages to the eye of a painter. I can read that one,

and know what it means."

Philip took this for the illusion of an habitual dreamer, and attached no weight to the opinion. Kathleen had given them no cause for uneasiness since she com-menced her "avocation." Her life passed with an almost mechanical regularity. She left the house every morning before seven -sometimes even before six. She had been observed to go ont as early as five. She came home again at any hour between nine and eleven, breakfasted alone in her own sitting-room, did her housework, her little bit of marketing, and then slept or rested for an hour or two. Then, later in the afternoon, she went out again, to return after

This was her manner of life, as seen by her sister and her sister's husband. They puzzled themselves exceedingly as to the nature of that employment which obliged her to keep such curious hours. They talked, and wondered, and speculated; but they did not venture to question her. She had entreated Rose to forbear; and Rose, who so fondly loved her, was content to remain in ignorance, seeing that the mourner seemed more tranquil, more resigned than before she began this unknown labor.

Yet they could not refrain from speculations and wonderings between themselves, the husband and wife, for whom life was free from all care save this one anxiety about the widowed girl.

Was her occupation that of a governess? Had she found two sets of pupils in some humble circle, where superior accomplishments were not demanded in a teacher? Did she go to one family in the morning, to another in the evening? This seemed a natural and likely explanation. But if it were so, why had she made a mystery of so simple a matter?

They could only wait and watch. They were too high-minded to follow or to play the spy upon her. But they watched her face, her bearing, when she was with them -which was but rarely now-and they waited for the revelation of her secret.

She would not make her home with them That was Rose Durand's worst grief. If she could have had that beloved mourner beside her hearth every day; if she could have see her bending over the little one's cradle, b ner bending over the little one's cradle, be guiled by the sweetness of his dawning in the late of the

But Kathleen hugged her loneliness as if It were the one precious thing left to her. She would not be tempted from her solitude in the two quiet rooms up-stairs. "I am other. But whatever the distance, she went tired when I come home from my work," to her work with the same quiet patience, she said one day, when Rose upbraided her the same tranquil aspect. Nobody ever rewith my dreams of the past."

They are not good for you, Kathleen, those dreams of the past."

"O yes, they are. They are my greatest comfort. Sometimes, sitting here in the A clerk's wife, catering for her little house afternoon sunlight, with a volume of Hugo or Musset in my lap, I almost believe that Gaston is sitting in that chair where you are now, by my side. I dare not lift my eyes to "Why not?"

there and the spell would be broken. You don't know how real day-dreams are to me." "Too real, Kathleen; such dreams as these lead to madness."

"Let me be mad, then. I would rather be see him. I would welcome madness to-morrow if I could believe that he was still alive -if there need be no lucid interval in which I should remember that he was dead." "Kathleen, you frighten me to death!"

"You had further to go to your employment?" faltered Rose, looking at her won-deringly. "Is it not always in the same place?"
"Not always."

"Not always."
"That is very strange."
"Life is strange," answered Kathleen, one escape her "almost as strange as death. O Rose, my She hunted!"
"And the control of the con me. Believe me that all is going well with me. I am doing no harm. I am doing my duty. And all will come right in the end."

This was spoken with a fervor which in some measure reassured Madame Durand. She had never suspected evil of her sister. She knew that pure nature too well for doubt to be possible upon this score. Her chief fear, her ever-present dread, was for the soundness of the girl's reason, for the capacity of her mind to stand against the dined or supped late in the evening, at long strain of a great sorrow. Kathleen would not go to her sister's rooms, but Rose went to the widow's lonely home two or three times in every day; she would not be put off by Kathleen's desire for solitude. She went to her the last thing every night, and knelt and prayed with her; but Kathleen's lips were dumbthat spirit which had once been fervent in prayer was now voiceless. The widow knelt man. beside her sister with bowed head, but there ! No were some of Rose's prayers to which she would not even say Amen. "Why do you not join in the Paternoster, Kathleen?" Rose asked tenderly.

"Because I cannot join with all my heart. Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. If I said that with my lips my heart would be the heart of a liar. There are some debts that cannot be forgiven, some wrongs that must be avenged.'

"Vengeance belongs to God," answered Rose quietly. "And with Him it is not vengeance, but justice.'

"That is all I want," said Kathleen.
"Justice, justice, justice!"
And then she lifted up her face, which had been bowed upon her clasped hands un-til now, and prayed aloud:

O God, Thou art my help and deliverer! O Lord, make no tarrying! The wicked walk on every side when the vilest men are exalted. As the fire burneth the wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire, so persecute them with Thy tempest, and make them afraid with Thy storm."

FOUND.

The days and weeks wore slowly on; July came and passed, and it was mid-August.
Paris was at its hottest. It might have been a city in the tropics. Thick white mists rose from the boulevards and clouded the even-ing air. The stones in the courtyards of hotels and great houses were baked in the sunshine. The very sound of water splash-ing upon the hot streets was rapture. The atmosphere was heavy with heat; and it seemed as if the low thunder-charged sky were a cast-iron dome which roofed in the city and suburbs.

That city, once called beautiful, still word the aspect of devastation. The ruined houses still gave forth an oder of smoke and burn-The fierce meridian sun drew out the stench of charred wood. On every side were sinister ugliness, and she could recall every the signs and tokens of destruction. On line in that bulldog visage. every side one heard of loss, and sorrow, and death.

The herd of tourists went tramping through the city, staring, gaping, expatiating on the spectacle—disappointed some-what that things were no worse. They had expected to find Babyion a heap; and here were her palaces and churches still stand-ing, her spires and pinnacles still pointing heavenward, her domes glittering against the hot blue sky. The tourists were disillu-sionised, and felt they were getting very little for their money.

The mightier of the ruins remained as anarchy had left them; but here and there the work of reparation had begun. Trade was reviving. The markets had resumed their normal aspect, and food was to be had at the old prices. The theaters were beginning to reopen their doors. Restaurants and cafes had smartened themselves up to accommodate a floating population of travelers, taking this desolated Babylon on their way to fairer scenes. Again the clinking of teaspoons and the clash of glasses were heard on the boulevard. The petits ereves, the cocodettes, had emerged from retirement, or had come back from exile. Paris was Paris again; but a sorely impoverished, somewhat humiliated Paris, Kathleen's life pursued its beaten round all this time. The oppressive heat of those August days did not deter her from her labor. Every morning before the shops were opened she was in the streets, neatly clad in her black gown and close black bonnet, a little market-basket on her arm, as of one who went upon a housewife's errand. In the dim early morning she walked to her destination-one of those two hundred and thirty-two workshops which she had writ-ten down in her list. Some of these were in the remotest corners of Paris, and many of her morning walks were long and weary; but she was careful to allow herself ample time for these long distances. She always d her map over-night, and learned the anowledge of the great wide-spreading twn. It seemed to her as if there were not corner of Paris, not a nook or an alley, which she had not explored. Sometimes her destination was some foul-smelling lane at Belleville, some dingy street near Montmartre. She went as far as Vincennes on one side, beyond Passy on the with unkindness in refusing to spend her marked her as an eccentric-looking person; leisure hours in the Durand menage. "It no one ever saw wildness or exaltation in would be no rest to me to be with you and her manner. She walked quietly onward, marked her as an eccentric-looking person; baby, dear as he is. I want to be quite alone at a moderate business-like pace, her little hasket over her arm; her pale earnest face shaded by the neat little crape veil, tied closely round the small black bonnet; and she inspired no one's wonder or curiosity. hold: a sempstress going to her work. She might be either. When she reached her destination, and stood in front of the curriers' workshop, her task became more difficult. She watched "Why not?"

for the going and coming of the workmen
Because I should know then he was not at their breakfast-hour, between nine and ten o'clock. She had to observe without being observed. She hovered near the door of the restaurant where they took their soupe on fromage. She had to loiter in the street or the lane, without appearing to be mad and see him there, than sane and not a loiterer. This exacted all her powers as an actress; but, as every intelligent woman is instinctively an actress, she contrived to Cœur. Kathleen knew the popular mind perform this part of her task so skilfully as upon this subject, and she heard Durand to escape, for the most part, unquestioned

For the man she wanted was one man among all the curriers of Paris, and to let one escape her might be to lose him. She hunted her prey with the tenacity of

The work was very slow work. August was nearly over, and she had not completed the third part of her list. The curriers' shops were scattered. It was rarely that she could do more than two in a day-one in the morning, when the men went to their work; one in the evening, when they left work. She was getting to be curiously familiar with the curriers of Paris, their ways and their manners; the restaurants where they narrow tables in low dingy rooms, by the light of tallow-candles, and amid overpowering odors of cognac and cheese soup; the wine-shops where they swilled gallons of "little blue," or stupefied themselves with

She learned a great deal: but in all this time there had been no sign of Serizier, no clue to the whereabouts of that one work-

Now and then she ventured to accost one of these blue blouses, who answered civilly or brutally, as Fate willed. But, for the brother, a currier by trade, of whom she had lost all trace since the Commune. His chief friend was a man-also a currier-called Serizier, and she thought it likely that wherever Serizier were working, her brother would be working too.

Did monsieur happen by chance to know anything about a currier called Serizier? No, nobody knew of such a man. Some to whom she spoke remembered the name and the man in the day of his splendor-with a cocked hat, and a red scarf round his waist. There had been a passion for red scarfs among the Communards. Perhaps it was the color that charmed them, the hue of that blood which was to them as an atmos

Those who knew all about Serizier's past career could give her no enlightenment about his present whereabouts, and she always made her inquiries judiciously, indirectly, putting forward that mythical brother as the motive of her questionings. She did not want to be known as a woman who had inquired for Serizier, lest the hunted should get wind of the hunter. And so she came to September, and in all the blue blouses, the heavy figures, and stooping shoulders, the toil-stained hands, the close-cropped bullet-heads, she had seen no sign of Serizier. How should she know him when she saw him?

Easily enough. First, she had his photopraph, which she had discovered, after a diligent search, in a shop on the Boulevard St. Michel, among other heroes of the Comune. Secondly, she had seen him once in the flesh, and his face had impressed itself upon her memory in a flash, as if it had been photographed upon her brain. It was not a common face; it was original in its

She had seen him soon after the skirmish at Issy, when his laurels were yet green, and the street-arabs cheered him as he passed at the head of his regiment, in gaudy uniform, red scarf, waving plumes, clanking sword, on a horse which he could not ride, boastful, triumphant. It was in the spring evening, the clear cool light of declining day, when she stood on the quay, hanging on her husband's arm, and watching the soldiers go by. Gaston told her all about Serizier. A brute, but a brave brute, he said, and good at training his soldiers—a man who was likely to come well to the fore, if the Com-mune could hold its own.

And so, with the evening sunlight on his face, Serizier rode slowly by, she watching him, open-eyed with wonder that such a brute face as this should belong to one of the people.

The face was as vividly before her eyes to-day as it had been that April evening. She looked at the photograph every night before she went to her rest. Let him dis guise himself as he might, let him de his skin like a blackamoor's, or hide creeks and mouth and chin behind a forest of beard from her. His face was never absent from 100 acres. her mind.

So she went on with her work doggedly, hopefully, albeit there were times of feartimes when she recalled how little foundation there was for any certainty that Serizier was in Paris, or even that he lived. The man for whose going in or coming out she watched morning and evening might be far away in the New World, rioting and revelling upon the spoils of revolution, conveyed to him yonder by some faithful friend; or his corpse might have been huddled into one of those common graves which had yawned to receive hecatombs of navieless

The Durands had both been curious as to the fate of Suzon Michel. It was known in the Rue Git le Cœur that she had been active amidst the atrocit the Cor chining was an win to have been busy amidst scenes of riot and death. There were some who declared that she was the petrol euse who had ridden, dressed as a vivandiere, at the head of that hideous procession in the Rue Haxo, when the priests and the gendarmes were led to the slaughter, less happy in their doom than the Archbishop and his companions, who were massacred within the walls of La Roquette. Certain it is that she had been seen more than once in a vivandiere's costume, and that she was known to be one of the fiercest of that hellish crew.

Some said that she had been shot down on the last of the barricades, youder at Belleville; others declared that they had seen her in a gang of prisoners bound for Satory. No one regretted her; but there was a morbid curiosity in the Rue Git le Cœur, and two or three adjoining streets, as to her fate. Details of her last hours, seasoned with plenty of blood, would have been

The cremeric had been closed from the first day of the barricades, and had never reopened. A board in front of the shop an-nounced that is was a louer presentement. Either la Michel was verily gone to give an account of her sins in the land of shadows, or she was keeping out of the way, lest she should be called upon to answer for her misdeeds before an earthly tribunal. This was what was said of her in the Rue Git le and Rose discuss the question on one of those rare occasions when she consented to join them at the neat little supper table. It was almost a festival for Rose when she could induce her sister to spend the evening

"I always hated that woman," said Rose, speaking of Suzon Michel; "a bold bad woman, capable of any crime." "A creature of strong passions, no doubt," answered Durand, "terribly capable of evil. But I do not know that she was quite inca-pable of good. These women who feel so strongly are as fitful as a summer thunderstorm; they will adore a man one day and murder him the next. But they have the power to love as well as to hate; they have strength for self-sacrifice as well as for

"I do not value their love any higher than their hate," said Rose, who had never forgotten her early impressions about Suzon, never ceased to be jealous and suspici of the woman who had dared to love Kathleen's lover; "their hearts and minds are all evil, their love is a snare. If she is dead, well-God give me charity-let her rest in her grave; if she is living, God grant that she and I may never meet."

It was only a few days after the evening upon which this conversation occurred that Kathleen had startling evidence of Suzon when people believed her to be either dead

A Simple Steam Bath.

The following simple directions, by following which a bath may be obtained by those who are not possessed of those doubtful luxuries called "modern conveniencies," are extracted from an jaundice: "To assist nature still more I have the patient take a steam bath every night on going to bed. As one or the other of the young practitioners may not be familiar with the easiest and cheapest method of procuring such a bath I will explain my modus operandi. The room in which the patient is to take the bath is brought to a temperature of 74 deg., as determined by the thermometer—to prevent chilling; the patient, perfectly naked, sits on a high cane-seat chair, and is totally envelregarded as superhuman, resides near Lake. I have been so particular about these directions first for the reason given above, and then because I wish press the reader with the necessity of using the utmost caution that the patient during this procedure does not become chilled. While I have seen the greatest benefit arise from this steam bath, and improved with it cases that did not seem to yield to any other mode of treatment, I have observed frreparable injury being done for want of the caution alluded to. In one case I am positive that a patient had a relapse and died within twelve days, because, when coming out of the bath and feeling so well, as he had not for many a long day, he had run, "just for the fun of the thing," after a friend out into the cold entry."

Talking with a friend the other day about the tricks of youth and the dimly remembered slipper, he said that he recollected one day when his mother was sick and his prim old aunt came to preside over him, the older brother and the table. Having teased his aunt past all endurance, she tapped his sconce, when he called her an old fool. At the supper table his father was informed of his impudence, and Will was told to go to the head of the table and tell his aunt he was sorry. He went and fulfilled the command with hanging head, by saying: "I'm sorry you're an old fool, Auntie." He supper, but meant well.

A Word to Be Abolished.

A gentleman recently remarked that the word "million" has done more mischief in America than any single word. Said he: "Nobody thinks there is any pleasure in life unless he has got a million. Persons who have got a little more than a competence are stretched up to be millionaires, and therefore moderate expectations are out of fashion, and our young men go laboring on with a million in their mind, which they seldom reach, and therefore are disappointed." Another person remarked on this: "A great deal of happiness centers around words. The Frenchman never speaks of his home, but of his 'interior,' He calls the furnishing and fixing up of his house, 'a beautiful interior.' Not knowing much about home in the concrete, it occurs makers no longer desirable. New and

The eyes are sunken, the hands and feet become cold and feel clam my. After a while a cough sets in at first dry, but after a few months it is attended with a greenish coloured expectoration. The afflicted one feels tired all the while, and sleep does not seem to afford any rest. After a time he becomes nervous, irritable, and gloomy, and has or whirling constion in the head when rising ap suddenly. The bowels become costive; the kin is dry and hot at times; the blood become thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes be come tinged with yellow, the urine is scanty and high-coloured, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste, and cometimes with a sweetish taste; this is frequently attended with palpitation of the heart; the vision becomes impaired with spots before the syes; there is a feeling of great prostration and weakness. All of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-hird of our population has this disease in som-of its varied forms. It has been found that medical men have mistaken the nature of this lisease. Some have treated it for a liver com-plaint, other for kidney disease, etc., etc., but none of the various kinds of treatment have been attended with success, because the remedy should be such as to act harmoniously upon each one of these organs, and upon the stomach

Been to the Club.

"Where have you been at this late hour?" sternly asked Mrs. Tongue-lasher, as her liege and lord staggered in at the door, bowing to the hat rack.
"Been to club," he answered with much difficulty.
"You know this is not club night," she howled emphatically. "Was call meetin' by sec'terry," he replied thicker than before.

"Oh, yes, it may have been called a meeting by the secretary, for he runs a gin shop; now tell me, what was the object of this called meeting?" "Was call meetin' to confer with crowd lawyers," he returned, feeling his way to the water bucket. "An' I his way to the water bucket. Sorrowfully she looked at him and said, as he snugly tucked his boots-between the sheets, and threw himself under the bed:

"Yes, from the way you smell, I should think you met all of the members of the bar."

The thriftiness and commercial ability of the Germans are well shown in the last new trade invented in Berlin. Everyone knows that even the neediest newly married couple have a certain embarras de richesses owing to their wedding presents, including many duplicate specimens, and such willful waste is especially galling to the provident German housewife. An ingenious gentleman accordingly hit upon the idea of calling upon brides in Berlin and offering to exchange or buy for each their duplicate presents. The great art in giving presents is no doubt to select things which look as if they cost more than they really do, and the new "Exchange and Mart" in Berlin must cost many disappointments; but the trade seems to be thriving, and there are already some half a dozen persons engaged in it.-English Paper.

MR. D. MAXWELL, Paris. Dear Str.,—I have been informed that agents for Heavy Elevating Binders are circulating a report that I said your Light Low-Down Binder, that Mr. Beatty had on my farm last year, testing, did not work satisfactory. I would just say that any such report is false, as it done its work in an excellent manner. I works it in heavy wheat, and long and short oats, some of the oats were very heavy, and it done its work just as well in heavy grain as in light. I have seen several Binders work, but never saw one do better work, of draw as light. Two horses handled it quite easily.

DEATH OF COL. WILLIAMS.

It is our melancholy task this week to ecord and convey to our readers the sadlest of sad news, namely, the death of COLONEL WILLIAMS. The unexpected has gain happened. Borne through the trials and dangers of those memorable and now historic marches, which we have from time to time recorded; preserved amidst the hick, flying shot on the battlefield, whilst others fell wounded; on his way nome from a successful campaign with the aurels of the hero, and accompanied by his victorious battalion, to receive the plaudits of a grateful and admiring counry, our beloved Colonel was struck down tions which were being made to sound the joyful pæans of triumph have to be turned into the sounds of mourning. These circumstances render the death an inexressibly sad one.

On Monday morning, when our people aw the flags at half mast and knew the reason, they were studged by the intelligence, and a deep gloom se:tled over the town. The event was the only subject of conversation, and there was but one feeling, that of inexpressible sorrow. The news is the saddest and most dissstrous that Port Hope has heard for many a long day. There is no one in the community who could be so ill spared. Port Hope was peculiarly bound up with COLONEL WILLIAMS. Hara he was

COLONEL WILLIAMS was known to the world under the fierce light which beats upon a public man; and well does his ife bear the scrutiny which may be turned upon it.

There was, however, another side to his character and life, which was not so well known to the world, for not only was he a man of gentle and unassuming manners, but he was one of great modesty. Only to the congenial few who could draw him out, was it known that he was a man of considerable reading and of intellectual and religious culture. Now that he is gone, it is gratifying to remember that he was no formalist, but was an earnest and devout Christian man. A member of the Church of Engand, he was wide and catholic in his sympathies towards all Christian de-Christian thought and literature of the lay, and to enjoy a conversation with him, on such topics, when his mind was in repose, was something not to be for-

A telegram has been sent to the Minister of Militia asking if the Midland Battalion cannot be got here in time to take part in the funeral, and a reply has been reeived from the Minister that he has telegraphed to the North-West to ascertain if this request can be complied with. Further particulars will be reseived in a day or two, and the publi will be made aware of what arrangements have been made at as early a date as possible.

OUR HONORED DEAD.

COL, WILLIAMS.

The eulogies of Col. WILLIAMS, M. P., in the House of Commons last night were by loses a gallant son. Against a far more formidable foe than Halfbreeds and Indians he would have demonstrated that the Dominion can give birth to a race of soldiers, in dash, in courage, in impetuosity, and in staying power in no whit inferior to the best specimens of the iron races from which Canadians have sprung. It was not given him to die a soldier's death in battle. He fell a victim to a raging fever. Yet was his life as truly a sacrifice to his country as though he had fallen, shot through the heart, while in the van of the daring charges apon the rifle pits of Batoche. Other lives than his also will wither away as the result of the terrific strain of these last exciting three months. Many a wife will be anguished to see dear ones fading away day by day before their eyes, from ill-

THE Franchise Bill has at last passed the House of Commons. The large majority of the representatives of the cople who voted for it clearly shows ow unpopular and unjustifiable were he despicable tactics of the Opposition for its defeat.

A GRIT paper complains that "at an ssault trial in Brantford, the witnesses were all Indians. Some of them could not speak English and an interpreter was necessary. These men will be given the pallot by Sir John Macdonald's Franchise bill." This is truly a knock-down argument against extending the franchise to Indians possessing the necessary qualification. But is there anything wonderful in witnesses in a Canadian court being unable to "speak English?" We think ot. The same thing occurs throughout the Province of Quebec every day, and even in Ottawa, where the Free Press is printed. Should the French-Canadians herefore be disfranchised?

CATARRH-A NEW TREATMENT.

CATARRH—A NEW TREATMENT.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine, has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines, and other advertised cures, never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once dapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effect dby him four years ago are cures still: No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be denie at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXSON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1882.

Electrical New York

New York is now lighted by electricity, deals on the market by electricity, receives its quotations by electricity, has its photographs taken by electricity, talks by electricity, is treated for disease by electricity, is elevated be carried by the same subtle and powerful agency. The latest application of the fluid was in Spruce street, where an elevator is now daily run in a sixstory structure, with electricity as the motive power. The fluid is carried over house-tops for a distance of two blocks, and when applied in full force lifts over 2,000 pounds of freight with ease. Other elevators of the same character are being put in, and generating centers for the same purpose are talked of in several parts of the city. The expense is less than steam. The electric locomotive will soon supplant the steam engine on railroads. Great is electricity! And what a thundering people we shall be when we have everything run by lightning!-The Artisan.

Novel Costumes in Algiers.

The charm of Algiers is in the variety and novelty of its costumes. see crowds of Arabs, some lying under the shade of the houses, others mounted on little asses, or sipping their coffee as they sit cross-legged in the doors of the cafes. We meet the kabyle with his water jug on his shoulder, the magnificent negress under whose blue haik we can see the yellow skirt and red scarf, and whose imposing figure well carries off this brilliancy of color; the handsome Turk; the multitude of Hebrews, their striking features surmounted by the triple turban; the Jewesses, who, especially on Saturday, appear in rich silks and cloth-of-gold saiks and stomachers. Add to these the gay zouaves, and the white-robed forms of the Arab women, with their full trousers, and sometimes only one eye visible beneath their veils, and we have before us a picture ever changing, and of never failing entertainment. The place du Gouvernment is considered the center of Algiers; and around this open square, under the shade of palm trees, moves this motley throng.

Another Run on the Umpire.

Stubbs was seen going down Wisconsin street Sunday morning carrying a shot-gun, a club and a revolver. A friend stopped him and inquired what was the meaning of all the warlike dec-oration. "Didn't you hear about it?" inquired Stubbs. "No; what was it?" further inquired the friend. "Why, I was chosen to umpire a game of base ball between the morning and evening newspaper reporters, and I propose to back up every decision I may make. I'm not much on the run, but I can shoot like the mischief in an emergency." Stubbs' decisions, it is learned, were accepted without a murmur by

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A New Autograph Album.

This autograph business is getting to be a little bit tedious. It is all onemaking a collection of the autographs of "prominent men," and who sends a printed circular formally demanding your autograph, as the tax collector would demand your tax.

John Comstock, the President of the First National Bank of Hudson, the other day suggested an idea. I gave him an autograph copy of my last great work, and he said: "Now, I'm a man of business. You gave me your auto-graph, I give you mine in return. That's what we call business." He then signed a brand new $5 national bank note, the cashier did ditto, and the two autographs were turned over to me.

Now how would it do to make a collection of the signatures of the presidents and cashiers of national banks in the United States in the above manner? An album containing the autographs of these bank officials would be not only a handsome heirloom to fork over to posterity, but it would possess intrinsic value. In pursuance of this idea I have been considering the advisibility of is-

Women as Telephonists.

Three years ago the United Telephone company began to employ wo-man, says the Pall Mall Gazette. "Chiefly for reasons of economy," we learn, but beside this there are other advantages. If a boy 14 years old is employed as a telephonist his voice before long becomes hoarse and indistinct; with a girl this is not the case. The female voice is always clearer, and as a clear voice (beside a good ear) is one of the chief requirements of a telephonist, women are naturally preferred. They are admitted at the age of 16, the majority of those at present employed by the United Telephone company being between the ages of 16 and 22. From the number of two, with whom the experiment was begun, they have risen to over a hundred, who perform their duties to the satisfaction of the company. Preference is given to the daughters of professional men; this, however, is no strict rule. There are no preliminary examinations to be passed before admittance into the telephone office. The different ranks are the clerk in charge, who has the super-vision of a room, in which are employed from six to fifteen clerks; the deputy of the clerk in charge, the first and second class operator, and the learner. According to these ranks the payment varies; as a rule, however, 11 shillings to 16 shillings is the weekly pay, which sometimes rises to £1, and in rare cases to 25 shillings. The hours of work are from 9 till 6 or 10 to 7 respectively. No case of illness has occurred on the staff since the commence-ment of the work. The general state of health is also satisfactory, and Mrs. Merlin, the lady superintendent of the whole staff, is of the opinion that the girls are on an average well satisfied with their situation and fond of the work. It is perhaps a disadvantage that telephonists have to talk all day long; but this very fact is said to prevent them from indulging in disputes and gossip and makes their work comparatively quiet-a point upon which ome subscribers to the exchange have been known to entertain a different opinion. The aspect of a telephone of-fice is curious enough to an outsider. A number of young girls sitting before a cupboard-like structure into the apertures of which they are busily chattering, holding in the meanwhile an instrument like an ear-trumpet to their heads, would appear ridiculous enough were it not well known how indispensable the telephone has become to civil-

John Wesley a Dictionary-Maker.

One of the greatest names on the roll of the eighteenth century is John Wesley's; and it may still be news to many who are familiar with his ever memorable achievements in other fields to learn that he also made a journey along the thorny path of dict-ionary-making. His book was published anonymously in 1753, under the somewhat ambitious title, "The Com-plete English Dictionary. Explaining most of the hard words which are found in the best English writers. By a lover of good English and common sense. N. B.—The author assures you he thinks this is the best English dictionary in the world." Notwithe given: "A Methodist, one that lives the Cunce, at Devell's Drug coording to the method laid down in he hiple." "Calvinists they that

It is very probable that the ve_etarian movement must sooner or later collapse, although at present it is promoted by very zealous advocates, who ignore the fact that the division of animals into herbivorous and carnivorous no longer holds good. A recent writer thus pretty accurately states the case: "With the exception of the ruminant group, whose highly specialized diges-tive organs are adapted to deal with huge quantities of sparing nutritious matter, the majority of mammals are of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended

AVER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND's farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. Leland's direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPA-BILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use. Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND's permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AVER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel. Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York,

Mr. LELAND's extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

GREAT JULY SALE

Although only a few months in Port Hope, I have to acknowledge that my reception has been greater than I expected. I have made many friends, and established the "ARCADE" beyond doubt as a GREAT BUSINESS CENTRE. My sales have been large-but my profits have been small, because I have given them to my Customers. Many years experience has taught me the value of closing out each Season certain lines of Goods, as only greater loss would result by carrying them forward to another year.
