Said He Would Take Forty Winks

The death of Mr. Charles Wilmot. of Belleville, had one extremely pathetic touch. About six o'clock he sauntered into the hotel with his face cheery as usual and put up with a friend a bet of ten dollars on a hockey match. Then, with the re-mark that he would have forty winks ere going out, he went up to his bedroom. Not long after the discovery of the fire Mr. Coleman and Mr. Philip, of Cobalt, were in the elevator, when a signal was given from the third floor. They raised the cage up to the first floor, but beyond that point they could not go on account of the heat. It is quite possible that the signal came from Wilmot.

Intensely pathetic is the fact that 'say's livery by Chief Chilton, charged Mr. Wilmot in a letter home just with putting a poisonous drug in a man's beer while drinking at the bar and with the alleged intent to rob

THE SONG IN THE NIGHT

I woke in the night, the stars were hid, The skies were cold and gray; My soul grew sick with a nameless tear

And I had no faith to pray.

I thought of the day's mistakes with fears,

Of wrong that outmeasured right, When lo, from a rain-washed tree nearby

A bird sang out in the night.

So soft and so low was the broken song

So full of a glad content, Of a taith that new the day would

NEW NOSE MADE break Though the wet boughs o'er her bent. And straightway, the old glad truth was mine That taith must outmeasure sight,

That the dawn in breaking behind the hills.

To him who sings is the night.

Thoughout Ulster. OFFICERS HAVE RESIGNED? Report Is Current That Many Regu-

Leaders of Both Parties.

LONDON, March 21. - "War in Ulster" is the startling headline which the sensational London newspapers are displaying in the blackest type.

The Government began yesterday to dispose of its regular troops in Ireland so that they may be in a position to deal with any situation that arises. The cooler men among the loyalists and the Ulster Unionists, however, believe that nothing resembling war is yet in sight. corns with Holloway's Corn cure at

It is said that as a result of in-structions sent by the War Office to the Curragh camp yesterday that officers who objected to serving in Ulster must resign or be dismissed from the army, one hundred officers ten-dered their resignations.

The Army Council some time ago considered the possibilities of Home Rule strife and instructed Lieut.-Gen. Sir Arthur Henry Fitzroy Paget, who commands the Irish garrisons, to take all necessary precautions to maintain order and safeguard property. A general redistribution of the forces in Ireland therefore was begun yesterday. Two regiments were sent from the south to reinforce the t'lster garri-sons, while the '-oops in Ulster were moved to new stations in conformity daughters should draw lots for her, with the custom that, in the event of hostilities or rioting, soldiers should not be compelled to encounter people with whom they had formed friend-ships. In pursuance with the same rule some Irish recruits were sent from the Armagh recruiting station to England.

The possibilities of a collision between the British soldiers and the Ulster volunteers, resulting from the super-heated political feeling, are recognized, but the leaders on both sides are trying to exert a pacific in-fluence. John Redmond, the Nationalist leader in Parliament, yesterday telegraphed the Nationalists in Bel-fast an urgent pperl to abandon a parade arranged for Sunday in Londonderry, which it was thought would likely result in rioting. Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, and the members of the Ulster Council invoked calmness on the part of the volunteers.

Four Cabinet Ministers spoke of the Ulster situation a: different meet-ings last night. John Burns, President of the Local Government Board, in an address on the occasion of the unveiling of his portrait in the National Liberal Club, said:

"Home Rule is a question mainly for Ireland itself. Three-fourths of the people there have demanded it persistently for years and we have no right to listen to the demand for more concessions or yield to clamor. We have no more desire to yield to lawless lawyers than to lawless laborers."

Thomas McKinnon Wood, Secretary of State for Scotland, said: "We will carry Home Rule by agreement if we possibly can, but without it if we must."

Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in his speech, declared

Later on, in the midst of other occupations, whether giving his formal evidence at the inquest as to the technical description of Mr Freymuth's injuries or attending with anxious heart and skillful hands at the bedsides of his dearly loved ones at home, Alaric Deane's mind turned again and again to his short interview with Mr Lemaistre, and, as often as his thoughts wandered in that direction, his heart grew troubled.

What if the Frenchman failed to carry out his promise? What if he lingered in the neighborhood, where his presence threatened most serious consequences? What if a chance word from some smoke-room acquaintance in the the hotel should undo the false impression which he -Deane-had lied so unscrupulously to create? What if, reassured by some officious busybody as to the pertect propriety of his wish to take a last look at the face of his dead triend, he should apply in the right quarter and gain access to Mr Freymuth's body? What then? When Mr Lemaistre gave his word to leave Darmouth at once, he meant to carry out his promise to the letter. He even went half way to his bedroom with the intention of strapping his portmanteau there and then. But, having got so far, a sudden recollection checked him

When Miss Freymuth had shaken hands with him the previous night, she had expressed a wish to see him again before he went away. This in itself was sufficient to keep him where he was, at least until he had heard from her that she did not wish to see him.

There was another question, too. which suggested itself to him in connection with Hermione. If Raymond Freymuth had left a widow behind him, how was "mademoiselle" placed in regard to future arrangements? The announcement of hs friend's marriage had come upon him like a thunderclap. The poor old fellow had always been so loyal to his ideal woman in the person of his cousin, that this alliance with another seemed little short of sacrilege. She was so charming, too, this Hermione-so graceful, so gentle, so altogether gracieuse that Ray's disloyalty seemed utterly inexplicable. And, by the death of her cousin, this delightful creature was possibly left alone in the world, friendless and unprovided for.

Mr Lemaistre, in spite of his forty years and the hard knocking about he had known, was the soul of chivalry where a woman was concerned, and, if that woman were by the favor of fate, young and attractive-why, all the better! If by chance he could be of service to this relative of his dear old friend, how happy it would make him!

In such a case, to think was to act. He returned forthwith to the coffee room and wrote the following note:

"MADEMOISELLE: I return to London either this evening or tomorrow. Before leaving I should greatly' esteem the honor of an If, in my igno with you

"Do I look ill? I don't think I am ill. I feel greatly upset, of course. I could cry unceasingly. But I am not ill. Do you know, monseur, I have the strange, most ghastly feeling upon me that we have not come to the end of this early." tragedy vet. I live in the constant expectation of more horror: every little noise sets my heart beating fast; whenever any one speaks to me, I imagine they are going to tell me of some fresh catastrophe, I can't shake off the expectation of further misfortune." "Is it not wonderful, mademoiselle," he responded, with gentlest sympathy. "Your nerves are shaken - you cannot recover all in a moment. Perhaps, too, you 'are a little lonely in your trouble?" "No; my mother and I are together all the time. Mrs Freymuth shuts herself up in her own rooms and sees nobody."

"Ah, the widow !" he exclaimed. "I heard only a few hours ago that our poor Raymond was married. It came upon me as a great shock, mademoiselle. Through all the years of our close friendship he was so true in thought and deed to that touching little promise between you and him.

There was no attempt at effect in his manner-he was simply stating a fact. With his kind, honest gray eyes upon her, Hermione found it simply impossible to doubt him for a moment. She felt as certain that he and Ray had really been the close friends his words implied as she was of her own identity. Why her unfortunate cousin had chosen to deny this attachment was, and would always remain, a mystery. Hermione shrank from asking questions about it. It would be painful to Mr Lemaistre to know that the friendship had been repudiated by the dead man, and she also felt that there was something repugnant in hunting up secrets against him.

She passed the matter by, and answered the personal remark. "It was my tault, monsieur. He was willing and even anxious to carry out our old contract, but had waited too long, I suppose

My heart had grown cold, and I absolved him from the promise he had made." "And the property?" inquired the Frenchman. "You will forgive my curiosity, but last night I heard some people talking at the hotel, and I fancied affairs were not well with you. You must please pardon me the liberty I am taking; we were such friends, Raymond and I, that I almost feel answerable for the well-being of one who was so very dear to him as yourself. Will you let me count myself your friend also?" him. "Gladly and gratefully!"she cried, with an impulsive extending of her hands.

In all her late intercourse with her cousin, she had never felt so near to the lover of her girlhood as she telt now in this conversation with his old friend. When Mr Lemaistre spoke of him in that tenderly regretful way, it seemed to her that was indeed the gentle pon the thought that he had just a chivalrous, fearless Ray she had given her heart to all those long, long years ago - the Ray she had found it so difficult to recognize in the moody man, so pliable and infirm of purpose, who had come back to them seven months ago. air about him." "Gladly indeed will I count you among my friends!" she declared. "Poor Ray, his triends were always mine in the days before this cruel blight fell upon his young life." "Then you must give me the pri-vileges of friendship," he returned, acquaint myself with your affairs. I shall go away from this place now, because it seems proper that I should do so; but I shall return to Darmouth in the course of a few weeks, and then I shall busy myself in cheering you up a little. You have, ah, you don't know how sad and desolate a look in your eyes, my dear young lady! It is a look of heart hunger. "Yes,"the girl answered brokenly, "it is so, monsieur. My heart is always hungry, and I know not for what. You leave here to-night?" she asked, with a change of manner which he was quick to follow.

"To-night, or to-morrow quite "Shall you see-poor Ray before ou go? Doctor Deane tells me you go? that there is no trace of his having and to have laid my hand on his in some sort of a farewell before he went from our sight for his long, long sleep. I have a foolish little idea that he would know I was there wishing him 'Bon voyage' on his last journey." The Frenchman's voice trembled, and he walked up and down with averted face.

"Monsieur, if you desire it so very much, your wish shall be gratified,' said Hermione, deeply affected by his evident emotion. "There is no rule against your seeing him in the privacy of his own house, whatever may be the case elsewhere. They will bring him home as soon as it is the hall door and inquire for me at you to see him." "You are quite sure it will not incommode you in any way?" Mr Lemaistre asked, fearful that in her desire to gratify his wish she might be laying herself open to remark. "I am quite sure," she replied . "nobody but the servant and ourselves will know of your visit. You will come?' "Most certainly I will! I shall walk back to the village - Northcliffe, I think they told me it was Darmouth, with orders to fetch me again at ten o'clock to-night."

Then he and Hermione went out onto the drive, and the Frenchman took a long, sorrowful look around

It I had known of your objection-though it seems half past nine to-night, I will take to me utterly groundless -- I might not have suggested the sad visit; but, as the invitation came from me I hardly see how I can draw back. Besides, as I said before, why refuse? What is there to object to? What can your motive be for refusing such a very simple and natural fastening of the heavy shutters, and then the slighter lock of the window. When the doctor assured himself that the window would open easily, he put the heavy shutters to again, but without fastening them, and returned to the room and rearranged the curtains with the nicest pre cision. Even then he stood in the middle of the room and carefully compared the appearance of the draperies he had disturbed with the others before seeming thoroughly satisfied with his work. Last of all he pushed an easy-chair in front o the window, the catch of which he had unfastened, and sat down and waited with a look of blended agony and fixed determination.

Doctor Deane took no active part in the proceedings that tollowed, except to suggest that the trestles, with their burden, should be placed a little nearer the window side of the room, instead of so immediately in the middle-a suggestion which was at once acted upon.

At last all was complete and most of those concerned had crept from the room, leaving only Doctor Deane and poor, tearful old Puttick behind

Then the doctor rose from his seat, and raising the sheet covering the corpse, looked for an instant down upon the marblelike features of the dead. Puttick stood at his side holding a large lamp, the light from which fell full upon the quiet face.

Acting as it seemed; on a sudder thought, the doctor brought up one of the small reading tables to the head of the coffin.

"Set the lamp down there, Puttick," he said quietly. "Miss Freymuth is coming in presently. You had better leave a light in the room until after her visit."

The old butler proceeded to do as he was told. The table was slight, but there was no risk of its being upset.

"Bring the key with you," direct ed Doctor Deane, waiting in the passage until the door was locked, "and give it to Miss Freymuth when she comes down stairs. And, mind, Puttick, no one else is to go into the room until after she has paid her visit."

"I'll see to it, sir," the old man prised at the recognition, but he stopmurmured, as he helped the doctor red and listened, with an occasional into his coat. The salary shows to what degree of organization and perfection professionalism has brought one of the best of outdoor sports. It has made it a business, demanding a long apprenticeship of hard training, of the mind as well as of the muscles. Nine inning games are frequently played without a single error, and crowds of from ten to fifteen thousand people have assembled to watch matches. The quality of baseball, or skill of its players, has unquestionably been raised, but is this result a cause for particular gratification ? In the old Roman days, Marius ioined in the sports with the young men when he was over seventy years of age. The contest on the Field of Mars were as eagerly contested as any sport to-day and drew as large a proportion of people as ever watched the finals of a World's series. But they did not pursuemanly exercise for its own sake. Rather did they seek to developpowertul men for public service, in legion, profession or Senate. Not till wealth, corruption and private ambition began to undermine public virtue were gladiators and athletes trained to make pastime a business. The contests were better fought, skill was developed and thousands of weaklings bet their sestertii on the contests in the ampitheatre, when they themselves should have been training to meet Vandal and Teuton knocking on the outposts of the Empire.

In modern baseball there are thousands of interested spectators who are poor specimens of physical strength, poor examples of mentality. The spur that a keen baseball contest ought to give to youth ends in an ignorant and heated discussion of the fine points of the game. Of what value to the nation is all this highly trained skill in baseball or other kinds of sport, if it fails to bring into healthy action the future men of the country? Professionalism makes for skill in sport and at the same time gives rise to the alarming question that perhaps our youthful democracy is in the first days of its decline.

RETAIL MERCHANTS EXEMPT FROM ACT

Glad news comes to the retail merchants of the province, when they learned that the efforts of the Retail Merchants' Associations were successful in having all retail men exempted from the bill, which is now going through the Ontario Legislature. Mr. G. M. Trowen, Provincial Secretary of the Retail Association, appeared before the Commissioners who drafted the bill and gave a great deal of evidence. The final touch was made by an amendment to the bill at the last moment, in which was added to the end of the bill the exemption of all retail merchants from its operations. The Association had hundreds of petitions, with thousands of signatures, which were presented before the Legislative Committee a short time ago showing that they wished to be left out of the Act. The local branch of the Association is being strengthened by new members and the membership committee are assured that the Association here will be stronger than ever, and new work will be taken up.

"Yours truly,

"HERMIONE FREYMUTH." Thus it came about that, without the least thought of overreaching the doctor, Mr Lemaistre's departure from the neighborbood was postponed; and, in spite of Doctor Deane's attempt to get rid of him, his intercourse with the dead man's family was to be resumed.

When he arrived at the lodge at the time appointed, he found Miss Freymuth already awaiting him in the tiny parlor, dim by reason of its closely shrouded windows.

"It was kind of you to come,"she told him, smiling as he bowed low before her. "I did not like the idea of your going away without thanking you for your goodness to me yesterday." "Rather was it kind of you to away to his sacntum, which abutted on the the court, to await Miss Freymuth's coming.

As soon as Doctor Deane reached the shelter of the darkness, he stood still, and listened. The night was very quiet. Standing alone, with no sound near him save the soft, soothing murmur of the waves on the shore, he could hear his heart beating out the seconds against the quietness around him. Ab, there was the signal he had waited for the stable clock striking nine! Nine! And Lemaistre was due at half past !' Half an hour ! Would there be sufficient time?

Turning onto the turf at the side of the drive, he moved quietly back toward the house, until he came to a wicket gate which opened onto the path leading to the plantation door. He did not open the gate, for it might creak, so he threw his legs over, and, moving cautiously, made his way straight across the lawns and round the eastern end of the house.

Once in the shadow of the plantation, he moved more briskly, though even here he took heed where and how he put his feet down, so as to avoid the possibility of a stumble. He hurried along, the blank wall of the house on one side of him and the black shadow of the trees on the other, until he passed the plantation door and knew that he must be close to the library windows. Then he crossed the pathway and felt his way along the wall until he arrived at the casement. He pushed the window gently, and without a sound it swung inward a couple of inches or so. It was alright! There was nothing-absolutely nothingbetween him and the completion of his scheme, except his own will.

having just sent Puttick to see it anything was wrong in the kitchen, owing to the overpowering smell of fire that was spreading through the house. Miss Freymuth herself opened the door to Mr Lemaistre, and they stood for a moment or two conversing in lowered tones, waiting until the butler should return with the key of the library. Puttick came back almost immediately, saying that there was nothing at all in the kitchen to account for the smell of burning - which seemed to be increasing every instant-and that the servants there had been nervous about it even before he went to them. "Give me the key, Puttick," said Hermione, "and then run up to the nursery and see if all is safe there. Come, monsieur - we will go in together," she added, as the old man went off up the staircase.

We last saw poor Ray together," she whispered brokenly. "How little we thought then that the next "How time we should see him dead !" She crossed the hall as she spoke, and drew back the heavy cloth curtains which hung across the entrance to the side passage; but at the next step she tell back with a smothered cry of horror. "Great Heaven," she gasped,

"the fire is here!" and dashed down the narrow entrance, closely followed by her companion. But, before she had gone half a dozen steps, she was stopped by the suffocating fumes, and fell back with a cry into Lemaistre's arms. Half blinded and all but choked, he drew her back by main force to the hall again. "Is the body there?" the Frenchman asked. "We cannot reach it

ADDRESS

To Miss Emma Gibson.

DEAR FRIEND AND CO-WORKER,-With reluctance we gather to-night to bid you "Good-bye" and "Godspeed" before you take your journey to the golden, glorious West, that land of promise to those who have youth and vigor, ambition and hope to lay on her shrine.

It is never a pleasure to say 'Farewell" to one we have learned to esteem, as we esteem you, both because of the splendid service you have given so cheerfully in the various departments of our church work, and your own genial, kindly and winning personality, but we desire to assure you of our deep interest in your welfare, and our confident expectation is that you will make a host of new and trustworthy friends wherever you go.

However we are selfish enough to hope that the strength of the new associations will never be great enough to entirely obliterate the memory of the old friends you leave in Port Hope, and we, who have had the privilege of fellowship with you in the work of our B.Y.P.U. and Choir ask you to take with you, as a slight memento of our great esteem, this bracelet. May its golden circle ever be a sure link to bind you to the large circle of true friends you will leave behind. May its pearls (fit emblems of purity and innocence) ever be appropriate symbols of your own life in the great world to which you go, and may God's Richest Blessing be your portion here and hereafter. REV. J. S. LAFLAIR.

POLICE COURT

Two men were charged in the Police Court, last Saturday with being in a certain Hotel during prohibited hours. In the first case the

In the other case, Mr. Ward admitted the offence as charged but argued that the defendant being an employee at the Hotel and that the offence now charged was the offence for which the proprietor was convicted on March 14th, that the defendant came within the provision of sub-section 2 of section 56 of the Act. The fact of the defendant being an employee of the Hotel was admitted by the prosecution and whilst the Magistrate was of the opinion that the offence here charged was not the same as the proprietor's case, it certainly arose trom the offence for which the proprietor was convicted and in view of the doubt as to the application of the above sub-section he dismissed the case. Joshua Barnhardt appeared in the Police Court, Wednesday, on a charge of trespassing on the property of Mrs. Alice Taylor. Barnhardt had been living in a house owned by Mrs. Taylor and according to his story he was told to look for another residence. He did so immediately and has left the place. The defence is that Barnhardt did not leave when ordered. Mrs. Tavlor did not appear until 10.30 o'clock and then the case had been adjourned until Friday. Mr. Chisholm appeared for the plaintiff.

For the first time in many years, last Friday, Port Hope won the Port Hope-Oshawa cup, from Oshawa. How they did it, the Oshawa curlers don't yet quite understand. Tuesday of last week, three rinks of the 5 00 pride of the Oshawa Curling Club, went to Port Hope, faring fairly 3 co well, two of the rinks winning by 7 and 8 shots respectively, and the last losing by 7 shots. However, 5 58 when the return games came off in Oshawa, last Friday, what happened to Oshawa's brave defenders, is too sad to relate. It is said that it took two or three score boards to record Port Hope's score, while Oshawa hardly needed a score board at all. However, it was an off day for Oshawa, and the cup went to Port Hope for only the second time in eight years. Names of the rinks? No names .- Oshawa Reformer.

Call To Volunteers.

BELFAST. March 20 .- An emergency force of picked men from the Ulster Volunteers was hastily cummoned to headquarters last night. The motive for the sudden call has been kept secret, but rumors persist of military action on the part of the Government, and projected arrests.

Referendum Is Rejected.

LONDON, March 20. - Animated scenes and the exchange of strong epithets marked the introduction of a vote of censure on the British Government by Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition, in the House of Commons yesterday. The word "liar" was hurled at the head of Joseph Devlin, Nationalist member for Belfast, when he declared that Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, had at one time been a home ruler.

Mr. Law's proposition that a referendum of the country should be taken on the Home Rule Bill and that the local option proposal for Ulster was rejected by Premier Asquith, who said that he believed the Government's proposals offered the :only hope of a lasting settlement.

The leader of the Opposition offered to give a guarantee that if the Government would take a referendum of the United Kingdom on the Home Rule Bill and the local option proposal, the Unionists both in the House of Lords and in the Commons would place no impediment in the way of carrying the will of the people.

Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, backed up Mr. Law's offer by saying that if the Premier was prepared to give him a definite offer of a referendum, he would accept its decision.

Premier Asquith, however, looked coldly upon the proposition of a referendum. He said he would not go farther than to say the Government took note of it.

The Premier who spoke only for a few minutes, said the Gove-nment did not recede from its proposals under which there would be no coercion of Ulster. The scheme, he said, gave a six years' trial of Home Rule Lefore there would be any attempt to bring Ulster under its provisions. He concluded with an expression of his belief that in the Government's proposals lay the only hope of a lasting settlemen

SOUTHAMPTON, March 20.-Yesterday there was laid to rest in the cemetery of the Sasgon, Indian village, Simpson Quakaghéezhig. He was the eldest Indian on the meerve, having been born two years before the war of 1812 broke out, and therefore about 104 years old. He was born in the Sasgon Indian village and resided there all his life. He was converted to Christianity when about 19 or 20 years of age, and was a staunch adherent of the Methodist Church. He was married twice but had no children. Till a few years ago when he became blind he would walk from his farm to Southampton, a distance of six miles, buy his provisions and other necessaries and walk home with them.

Prefers Death To Prison.

NEW YORK, March 20 .- "I would rather go to the clectric chair than spend twenty years in prison," said 19-year-old Harry Schaeffer to his parents in the Supreme Court yesterday when they urged him to plead guilty in the second degree at his trial on the charge of first degree murder for the killing of William T. Martin, a Toronto, Ont., milliner, last August. Taking the stand in his own defence, Schaeffer told how he and another man wrapped a towel around Martin's neck so tightly that death resulted after Martin had been lured to a west side flat. Schaeffer said he and his companion, who is a fugitive, had not intended to kill Martin, but merely to quiet him until they could rob him.

Exclusive to the Last.

An instance of exclusiveness maintained under difficulties is reported from the ladies' cabin of an Atlantic tiner. All were sick except one lady and a cat, which wandered uneasily about. The lady ventured to stroke the cat, remarking, "Poor pussy." The cat was inclined to respond and elevated its tail in token of good will, when from a neighboring berth came in choking tones the words, "Excuse me." that is a private cat!"

Wilde and Ouida.

Oscar Wilde once asked Oulda what she herself considered the chief feature in her work which won success. "I am the only living English writer." she replied. Fifty Persons Drowned In Disaster Near Venice.

VENICE, March 20. - A torpedo boat yesterday cut down a small passenger steamer which plies between Venice and Lido, a chain of sandy islands separating the Lagoon of Venice from the Adriatic, and fifty persons were drowned. The sharp nose of the torpedo boat went through the stern of the steamer, which sank almost immediately. The victims included many women and children. Fifteen persons who were on deck at the time were saved by the crew of the torpedo boat. The others were caught in the cabin and were carried down with the wreck. The Italian sailors dived many times in an effort to rescue those who sank with the steamer, but without avail. Intense excitement prevails here, not only because of the extent of the disaster, but because the names of the victims are not yet known.

' PLANING MILL BURNED.

Fifty Thousand Dollar Fire Occurs In Toronto Lumber Plant.

TORONTO, March 17. - Between nine and eleven o'clock last night the planing mill at the corner of Eastern avenue and St. Lawrence street, owned by the Laidlaw Lumber Co., was destroyed by fire. The loss, including damage dore to piled-up lumber by water, will amount to about $50,-000. There is insurance in several companies, but neithc: Robert Laidlaw nor his son Robert, junior, could state last night the exact amount carried on the burned mill.

After the Laidlaw fire was well under control, Chief Thompson learned that a blaze had started in Frankel Bros.' metal and junk yard across the Don. Three wagons and half a dozen men were sent around by the bridge, and the budding fire was soon put out. It is supposed that it had its origin in a spark from the planing mill.

No theory as to the cause of the planing mill fire was advanced last night.

Australia Will Never Submit to Jap Protection, Says Massey.

LONDON, March 23 .- (C.A.P. Cable)-Winston Churchill's utterances regarding naval defence in the Pacific continues to excite attention, Speaking Saturday at Creymouth, Premier Massey of New Zealand said Churchill's statement that the Anglo-Japanese alliance had secured the safety of Australia and New Zealand did not appeal to him. He did not want to do Churchill an injustice, but if the latter meant that the people of Australia and New Zealand were to be satisfied with the protection of Japanese ships and sailors then he was very much mistain .

Premier Massey said 1 2 did not for one moment believe that the Anglo-Japanese alliance had secured the safety either of Australia or New Zealand. The Government intended to ask Parliament at the earliest possible moment to authorize the building of a cruiser of the Bristol class to cost $2,000,000: He telieved that the best policy for the Dominion was to prepare its own ships. New Zealand must look forward to the time when a British navy in the Pacific would be ready to cope with any foe that Toronto's Fifth Big Fire This Year Causes Loss of $50,000.

TORONTO, Mr. ch 23 .- Fire, probably caused by a defective heating plant, broke out on the top floor of. the Allen building at Pearl and Simcoe streets on Saturday afternoon and did damage estimated at $50,000 to three firms occupying the building, This is Toronto's fifth big fire in the present year. The R. D. Fairbairn, Whitewear Manufacturing Co., which occupied the two top floors, received damage estimated las, night by Mr. Fairbairn at $40,000, principally to stock, of which a large part was water damage.

The east end of the top floor was gutted and will cost probably about $10,000 to rebuild, while the damage to the other firms in the building, the Allen Manufacturing Co. and the Swiss Laundry, will be trifling.

As the Fairbairn Company manufacture whit wear goods, the fumes played havoc with the fire department and several firemen were forced to come to the windows for air.

Government property, and on this assurance the officers eventually agr ed to proceed to Ulster for police duty, but resolutely refused to undertake hostilities against the Ulster lovalists.

There has been no diminution in the activity of the Ulster army. Yesterday the officers of the so-called headquarters staff on duty at Craigavon, now the centre of the Ulster movement, were busy taking the ranges of the various hills and other strategic points of Belfast Lough, which the estate overlooks. They had a rangefinder of the latest pattern. A sufficient number of motor cars are available to enable the administration to transport at least 2,000 men with rifles and ammunition to any threatened point in Ulster, three hours from Belfast, independent of the railway.

Ulster awaits with curiosity the next move of the War Office and other authorities, pending which the situation remains unchanged. Absolute order prevails in the city. Eighty special service "minute men" on duty at Craigavon marched to the Presbyterian church at Belmont early yesterday morning, taking their hospital corps and ambulance men, even the surgeons, but leaving fift; men behind to guard the rifles and patrol the estate while the others prayed in the pews behind Sir Edward Carson and other leaders.

Gen. Gough Resigned.

LONDON, March 23 .- The Sunday Observer asserts on high authority that Gen. Sir Arthur Paget visited Curragh on Friday al ' gave Gen. Gough of the third cavalry brigade the option_gof taking command at Ul-ster or retiring. Gen. Gough, who was allowed two hours for consideration, resigned immediately.

The Observer says that the Govern ment has decided to issue two hundred warrants for the arrest of the leaders in Ulster.

Repeal Fight Again Relayed.

WASHINGTON, March 23. - The opening of the legislative battle for repeal of the tolls exemption provision of the Panama Canal Act was delayed until next week by prolonged consideration in the House Saturday of the rivers and harbors appropriation bill. Renewed skirmishing in the Senate served to reveal, however, the intensity of feeling in the controversy.

Administration leaders had pland ned to call up the Sims repeal bill in the House Saturday and present rule to limit general debate to fifteen hours. It is not likely now that the bill can be taken up before to-morrow or that a vote can be had until late in the week.
