STOLEN MONEY ORDER CASHED

Police Have Names Of Two Allegedly Involved In Lakefield Case

One of the money orders stolen from the Canadian National Railways station at Lakefield June 30, when burglars carried away the safe containing $60 in cash and blank money order forms, was cashed last week at Maxwell in Grey County, it has been learned. From information revealed by railway police, it was believed the burglars have staged a series of thefts across the Province and are believed responsible for at least two car thefts.

Officers said they had names and descriptions of the two men wanted and have sent out circulars covering these. Before robbing the Lakefield station the burglars, police believe, stole a car at St. Thomas, Ont., and drove to the scene of the robbery, using the car to carry away their loot. The safe was found near Bensford Bridge, and it was believed the men had gone on to Smiths Falls, where their descriptions were obtained after they registered at a hotel there and left without paying their account. They left behind the first car and made off with another, police said, travelling into Grey County.

SECOND APPLE MAGGOT SPRAY

Instructions Issued From Local Department Of Agriculture—Spraying Method

In a circular letter sent out by E. A. Summers, Port Hope, agricultural representative for Durham County, timely advice is given regarding the second apple maggot spray.

The letter reads as follows:—The second apple maggot spray should begin two weeks after the first application. This will be from July 14 to 18. The latter date is as late as under ordinary conditions, as it is safe to postpone the application in any locality; otherwise if dry weather should follow enough poison may remain on the fruit at picking time to necessitate washing or rubbing.

Materials to Use
1½ lbs. arsenate of lead to 40 gallons water (use no fungicide).

Method of Spraying
Trees of varieties earlier than Wealthy, with fruit on them should be omitted; all apple trees whether with fruit or not should be sprayed from both sides, one side being covered but not overdone with the wind, and the other side sprayed against the wind as far up as the gun or nozzles will shoot.

NOTE:—This should be the last spray for this pest unless the weather becomes unusually wet and washes off the spray almost completely. If, however, it is washed off by the first week in August it would be wise in any orchard that was at all heavily infested last year, to touch up the trees lightly by merely driving along slowly and steadily and spraying the windward side with a fine mist shooting a little of the spray over the top as well as on the sides. One to two gallons per tree of twenty-five years of age is all that can be risked for the reasons mentioned in the first paragraph. If this third spray is necessary the mixture to use should be 1 pound arsenate of lead to 40 gallons of water.

CANADIAN RAILWAYS HAVE HIGHER EARNINGS

For the second week in succession, gross earnings of the two large Canadian railway systems show increases over the comparative periods of last year. For the week ended July 7 both the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National have gains according to the figures made public yesterday. Gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific for the week ended July 7 totalled $2,316,900 as compared with $2,220,000, an increase of $96,900.

The Canadian National reported gross earnings of $2,895,007, as compared with $2,848,863, and increase of $46,144.

In the nine days ended June 30, both roads reported gains over the corresponding figures of 1932.

MAYOR EXPLAINS MEETING MIXUP

Comments On Story In Local Press—Was Not Informed Of Change In Date

"There's two ways to take it, either that I was butting in or that my name had been left off the list," said Mayor W. J. Crowhurst, at Monday night's meeting of Council, in commenting on an article that appeared in last night's issue of The Evening Guide in reference to a meeting of the Emergency Association of Ontario Municipalities which was to have taken place in London, Ontario, on June 30.

His Worship made the trip to London only to find that the supposed meeting had been cancelled and would be held at a future date. Last night the Mayor, in explaining the situation pointed out that he was made a member of the Executive of the Emergency Association some time ago and that the date of the London meeting had been set at the last gathering in Hamilton. In the meantime, however, another meeting had been held and the date of the London conclave was changed. Members who attended the meeting at which the date was changed were delegated to inform any members not present of the change in time of the London meeting. Mayor Crowhurst was not so informed and accordingly arrived in London to attend the meeting only to find that the date had been changed.

His Worship wrote to Mayor Peelies, of Hamilton, President of the Emergency Association, asking where he might collect his expenses of $15.20. At last night's meeting the Mayor's expenses were included in the Finance Report to be paid by the municipality.

Read Repairs
Harry Black, one of the ratepayers who signed the petition presented at the last meeting asking that the portion of Deblaquie street between Francis and McCaul streets be made trafficable, was present at the meeting and told the council that he had broken his truck twice on this road, costing $35 in repairs. "I have crops on both sides of this street that I will have to harvest and unless something is done I will have to take action," concluded Mr. Black.

Reeve Elliott pointed out that the matter had been referred to the Street and Bridge committee and as the chairman was not present, at the meeting, no report had been made in the matter.

Market Report
According to the report on the market and scale presented by A. J. Chesher, receipts for June totalled $74.95 with 107 meals being supplied to holders and transients calling through the day.

Pasture Land
Elwin Bennett was given permission to pasture a horse in the town lot immediately north of the C.P.R. station, making application in person at the meeting.

Band Instruments
Deputy Reeve Edmunds, Councilor Jex and A. J. Chesher, the custodian, were appointed a committee to arrange for the loaning of the town band instruments to local men who will form a band for the Moose Convention here.

Grants Passed
A grant of $100 was made to the Dominion Day Committee to cover the deficit of the celebration here on July 1. A grant of $150 was also made for Direct Relief.

COOLER WEATHER CHECKS OUTBREAK

District M.O.H. Issues Warning Regarding Infantile Paralysis

A probable epidemic of infantile paralysis in several of the counties of Peterboro district was only prevented by the marked drop in temperature, was the opinion expressed by Dr. N. H. Sutton, District Officer of Health for eleven counties, stretching from Picton and Deseronto to Burlington and from the lakefront to Algonquin Park.

"Everything was ripe for the spread of acute anterior polio-myelitis (infantile paralysis). We had the hot, murky weather with the light winds, conditions under which the disease is always most active," stated Dr. Sutton.

During the hot spell of the past two weeks, he explained, there had been three cases of the dread disease in Eastern Ontario. One victim, a 12-year-old girl in Peterboro died a few hours after being admitted to hospital; another, a child in Prince Edward County, recovered; and another in Cramah Township, just north of Coburne, also fought through the disease. Over the week-end Dr. F. O'Reilly, secured serum from Dr. Sutton's office, but he explained that the serum was secured only as a preventive measure for a child who was showing some symptoms of the disease. Serum is rushed from the office throughout the district to combat the disease at the call of doctors.

Dr. Sutton stated that he feared that this summer may prove a repetition of 1930 when many cases of infantile paralysis were reported in the district which resulted in several deaths and some children paralyzed.

"Polio, as doctors call it," he explained, "is a most virulent type of germ, which is so small that it can not be seen with even the best microscope yet made. Several New York medical men apparently proved last year that they had been successful in showing it is round dots, just on the verge of visibility by means of photography. This opens up the possibility that we may soon be able to study the germ's habits, and we may possibly hope for an anti-toxin."

The serum now used in combatting the disease is secured from the blood of those who have had it and recovered.

Warning to Parents
Warning mothers as to the best means to prevent their children from contracting the disease, Dr. Sutton said: "See that their digestive system is kept in order. Make sure that they get sufficient sleep; if possible have them rest after meals before permitting them to go out to play. And by all means see that their bowels do not clog. A good laxative now and then is a great safeguard. At least one epidemic of the disease has been traced to unpasteurized milk."

"If another heat wave strikes this district and remains for any lengthy period," Dr. Sutton said, "it is almost certain the disease will break out again." He fears particularly that it will strike Hastings and Peterboro Counties.

In his conversation he declared that Haliburton County was one of the counties best served medically of any in his district. "All the doctors, particularly in the country districts, co-operate fully in preventing the spread of polio and other disease," he stated. "If they are in doubt, they telephone this office immediately, and we confer on the symptoms and decide the best steps to take."

OIL STOVE EXPLOSION DESTROYS COBBOURG HOME

When a coal oil stove exploded in their home, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Pearce, King Street west, Cobourg, was completely destroyed. Mrs. Pearce had lit the stove preparatory for the noon day meal, when it suddenly exploded. She was painfully burned during an ineffectual attempt to drag the blazing stove outside. Flames spread so quickly that the firemen were unable to prevent an almost total loss.

Pressing with a hot iron will loosen stamps and gummed labels which are stuck together.

LIONS CLUB STREET FAIR BIG SUCCESS

All Booths Were Well Patronized—Draw For Major Prizes Made At Midnight

The heart of John Haggis, aged 4, lying in the Port Hope Hospital for the past two weeks, was gladdened this morning when he was told that he held the lucky ticket on the pony, fourth prize in the major draw made by the Port Hope Lions Club at the annual street carnival here Wednesday night. He is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Haggis, Bloomsgrove Ave.

On Tuesday, the boy's father visited the hospital, and John was anxiously hoping that he would win the Shetland Pony. To-day when he was acquainted with the fact, he shouted for joy and is eagerly waiting to be discharged from the hospital so that he can welcome his prize. The horse has been christened "Donny Johnny."

The draw for the nine major prizes was made Wednesday night at 11:55 and a large crowd of people assembled in front of the stand. The tickets were placed in a cement mixer and the lucky numbers were drawn by Mayor W. J. Crowhurst.

The successful ones were:—1st—Mrs. Norman Walters, Ticket No. 4413—Gibbard solid walnut dining room suite.

2nd—Mrs. Harry Fraser, Ticket No. 1975—Moffat electric range.

3rd—Mrs. H. Hennessey, Ticket No. 4618—Coffield Electric washing machine.

4th—John Haggis, Ticket No. 3889—Shetland pony.

5th—Miss V. Rickell, Toronto, Ticket No. 4563—Mattress.

6th—Mrs. John Marshall, Ticket No. 1584—Tea wagon.

7th—A. D. Hutchinson, Toronto, Ticket No. 4615—100 lbs. gasoline.

8th—Harry Gibbs, Ticket No. 1647—veranda glider or couch.

9th—Mrs. W. T. Snelgrove, Ticket No. 2344—$10.00 worth of groceries.

The fair got under way promptly at 7:30 o'clock when a large number of children were on hand to receive the free ice cream cones. From then until midnight, the section between Ontario and Queen streets was thronged with people. All the various booths were well patronized and the attendants were kept on the move.

The new novelty prize, snuggle pots, won favour with the crowd and other prizes included cigarettes, silk stockings, flour, hams, toy dogs, chocolates, etc. The big wheel where blankets, dolls and hams were drawn for, was a popular spot.

Last night's event makes the third annual street fair by the local Lions and all previous performances were eclipsed. Every member of the club industriously laboured to put the affair over in a big way and the club is deserving of all kinds of credit. The proceeds will be spent in Port Hope and will be devoted to crippled children's work and in assisting needy people here next winter. The officers of the organization wish to thank everyone for their patronage and also those who assisted in any way.

It is not definitely known yet, but it is believed that the profits will total between $1,000 and $1,200. With in a few days, a complete financial statement will be published.

TO GET TRIAL IN HIGHER COURT

Oklahoma Doctor Committed Following Double Highway Fatality

Dr. Carl Haig, of Oklahoma, was committed for trial at Cobourg on a charge of manslaughter, in connection with the deaths of Edith Patterson and her son James, killed June 16 in a motor accident near Brighton.

The Haig machine met in a head-on collision with one driven by Thomas Martin, Toronto school teacher, returning to his Belleville home for the summer holidays.

At the hearing, Martin gave his version of the accident. "I saw a car coming from the east come over from the right to the wrong side of the road," he said. "I turned over to get clear but he headed right for me and collided with me. I was almost entirely off the pavement."

Another witness, Junias May of Toronto, said he was following Haig's car, which he estimated to be travelling about 35 to 40 miles an hour. A short time before the accident it swung over to the wrong side of the road, he said.

WEEK-END TOLL

Lured into cooling waters of rivers and lakes, six persons in Ontario met death over the week-end by drowning. However, the week-end was singularly notable for its lack of highway accident deaths, and early to-day not one person had been reported killed on the highways.

The water toll: Peter Milloux, Tilbury, drowned when his head became entangled in weeds and mud.

Gernard Goslin, farmhand, drowned in Grand River when he stepped into a deep hole.

Lawrence Davis, Halifax, N.S., perished in Sarnia Bay after suffering a heart attack.

Maxwell Hall, Buffalo, drowned at Point Albino while bathing.

Robert Armstrong, Sydney Township, drowned near Belleville when he attempted to save his 5-year-old daughter. The child was rescued.

RICE LAKE BOAT DAMAGED BY FIRE

Occupants Forced To Swim Ashore—Short Circuit Caused Fire

A boatload of American tourists were forced to jump into the water and swim for shore, on Rice Lake when Madden Howard's motorboat caught fire.

The party was out for a pleasure sail in Mr. Howard's 20-foot boat, when a short circuit occurred in the engine and a spark set fire to the grease in the bottom of the boat. Within a minute or two, flames wrapped the boat. Mr. Howard told his passengers, two of whom were children, to jump over the side. Luckily the boat was only about 50 feet from shore at the time and the water not very deep at that particular spot.

All the passengers made shore in safety. In order to save the boat which was a mass of flames, men from the shore set out in canoes and succeeded in overturning it. Thus putting out the blaze. Later the boat sunk, but it was brought to the surface Saturday, and Mr. Howard was busily engaged in repairing it.

NOVEL METHOD BEING ADOPTED

United Church Of Canada Adopts Novel Method To Raise Money

The Missionary and Maintenance Committee of the United Church of Canada has adopted a novel method of raising extra money. A small wooden box is placed on the table in the homes of those who wish to give something extra for missions. A cent-a-meal is the obligation it involves, that is, one cent per family, not a great strain on any family. On the box is written, "As we partake of Thy bounties, Oh Lord, we would be mindful of the needs of others." The possibilities of this method are rather startling. Dr. Bryce, the secretary of this fund, in a communication to Dr. Middleton the other day, stated that over 95,000 of these boxes had gone out this year so far and more are coming in from day to day. If those already distributed keep up their givings for a year, there will be one million dollars extra to help the great need that is confronting the Church these days.

CANADA'S SALES ARE INCREASED

Thirty Million Dollars More Exports To Britain

An increase of nearly $30,000,000 in the exports of Canada to the United Kingdom for the 12-month period ending May 31, 1933, is shown in the leading commodities as compared with the same period for 1932, according to a statement issued by Hon. H.H. Stevens, minister of trade and commerce. For the year ended a month ago total exports of leading commodities to Great Britain had a value of $108,076,782, while for the corresponding period a year ago the value of these was $79,961,244.

The largest increase in value was wheat which, at $65,744,808 this year was more than $25,000,000 greater than last year.

The value of bacon exports increased from $1,613,029 to $2,855,028 of barley from $1,407,999 to $2,810,242, of hams from $1,574,793 to $2,272,862.

An increase of nearly $1,000,000 was shown in timber exports.

Commodities exports that declined slightly were cheese, rubber, footwear, oats and wheat flour. In each case, however, the export volume was greater than during last year, the decline in value being due to lower prices.

CANTON

Rev. F. Bannister Preaches Inaugural Sermon—Presentation To Mrs. Doggett

A large congregation greeted the advent of Rev. Franklin Bannister on Sunday morning.

Mr. Bannister's inaugural sermon was an eloquent exposition of three arresting sayings of Jesus as recounted by Luke 12: 14-15 "Man Who Made Me a Judge or a Divider Over You," "Beware of Covetousness," "Life Consisteth not in the Abundance of Things."

Rev. A. S. Doggett also occupied the pulpit of his new charge last Sunday but, inasmuch as the renovating of the Oshawa parsonage could not be completed for some days later and Mr. Bannister was ensconced at his home, Garden Hill, it was arranged that Mr. Doggett should retain occupancy of this parsonage as long as he so desired.

Presentation

On Monday evening therefore, Canton church choir gathered at the parsonage "for a last practice". Songs sacred and secular were sung. Then during a pause in the singing Mrs. F. R. Currelley, organist and choir leader, in an informal speech expressed hearty appreciation of the faithful and efficient service which Mrs. Doggett had given throughout the past year; voiced the regret of all at her departure, uttered the sincere wish that Mr. and Mrs. Doggett and family might find happiness and success in their new field, adding the hope that they would return from time to time thus affording Canton people the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Doggett sing again and closed by asking her to accept a small gift as a token of love and esteem on behalf of the choir. The gift was a gold-lined silver cream and sugar set with silver tray.

Mrs. Doggett expressed her thanks and appreciation of the beautiful gift after which refreshments were served.

CROP REPORT

Extracts from reports submitted by Agricultural Representatives issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Western Ontario

BRUCE—Hay an excellent crop, probably 50% harvested. Orchards show a fairly heavy set of fruit.

PEEL—Farmers have been busy haying during the hot dry period of past weeks. Corn borer parasites have been liberated in Sweet corn fields of Norval, Huttonville and Dixie districts.

WATERLOO—On some of the light land it is possible that the wheat will be shrunken due to the extremely dry, hot weather we have had during the past week. Recent showers, however, will help the situation in the majority of districts throughout the county. Haying operations are well advanced and in some localities they are completed. Milk production has fallen off due to dried up pastures.

Southern Ontario

ESSEX—Hundreds of acres of fall wheat were ready to cut on the last day of June and wheat harvest will be in full swing the first week in July. Second crop of alfalfa can be seen on scores of dairy farms and it is their only salvation as far as pasture is concerned. Oats and barley will not be half a crop, many fields will not yield 20 bushels to the acre. Eggs are going up in price each day. Last week they climbed up about a cent a day until a few farmers with graded eggs were getting 18 and 20c.

HALDIMAND—Eggs were comparatively scarce during the week and prices advanced accordingly. Buyers were offering 12c, 14c and 16c at Dunnville and the same at Hagersville with an odd lot bringing as high as 17c for good quality.

KENT—Haying operations are practically completed. Harvesting of fall wheat has commenced. Yields likely to be disappointing on account of continued drought of recent weeks. There is a definite increase in the white bean acreage due to a large degree to the lack of moisture. Fully 20% of the land intended for beans is still unplanted and a large part of this acreage will be seeded to buckwheat.

MIDDLESEX—Fall wheat has developed very rapidly and in some cases will be ready for harvesting in a few days. The crop is only fair on the average, having suffered from dry weather in many sections with many fields having heads not completely filled and with small grain.

LAMBTON—A small general rain fell all over the County Friday morning. This was the first general rain since spring seeding. Haying is nearly completed. Fall wheat is ripening rapidly. Oats and barley are very short and heading out.

Central Ontario

DURHAM—Apple growers are expecting a heavy drop following the dry, hot weather. Apple maggot flies were found in this county on Thursday, June 29th. Many who have not put on the previous spray are spraying for this pest.

HASTINGS—2,026 cheese were sold on Belleville Board to-day at 11 1-16 to 11 3-16. 2,273 cheese were sold on Belleville Board a year ago at 9%.

NORTHUMBERLAND—Fall wheat continues to show favourable progress and it is the consensus of opinion that the rain has come in time to give the fall wheat of this county an opportunity to properly fill.

PETERBORO—Fall wheat is beginning to turn and indications point to a very early harvest. About 50% of the hay has already been cut and while there are some excellent stands many fields which showed excellent promise three or four weeks ago have only produced about a 75% crop.

PRINCE EDWARD—This county benefited greatly from Friday's rain. All crops were suffering from the early canning peas were very light crop. Milk flow dropped off very rapidly during the past week, due to the extreme heat and poor pasture.

YORK—There is an infestation of hessian fly and individual counts would show damage up to 8%. Hail has also hurt the crop in some sections.

Eastern Ontario

FRONTENAC—Managers of cheese factories report a decided dropping off in the milk supply. This is directly due to the drying up of pastures and the inadequate supply of summer silage.

GLENGARRY—Alfalfa crop has been harvested and generally the yield was heavy. The rest of the hay crop is poor and the yield will not be any better than a year ago. Cheese sold on the Alexandria Board on Monday night at: White, 10%; coloured, 10 9-16c.

LANARK—Cheese sold on Perth Board Friday night, coloured 10%; white 10 1-16c.

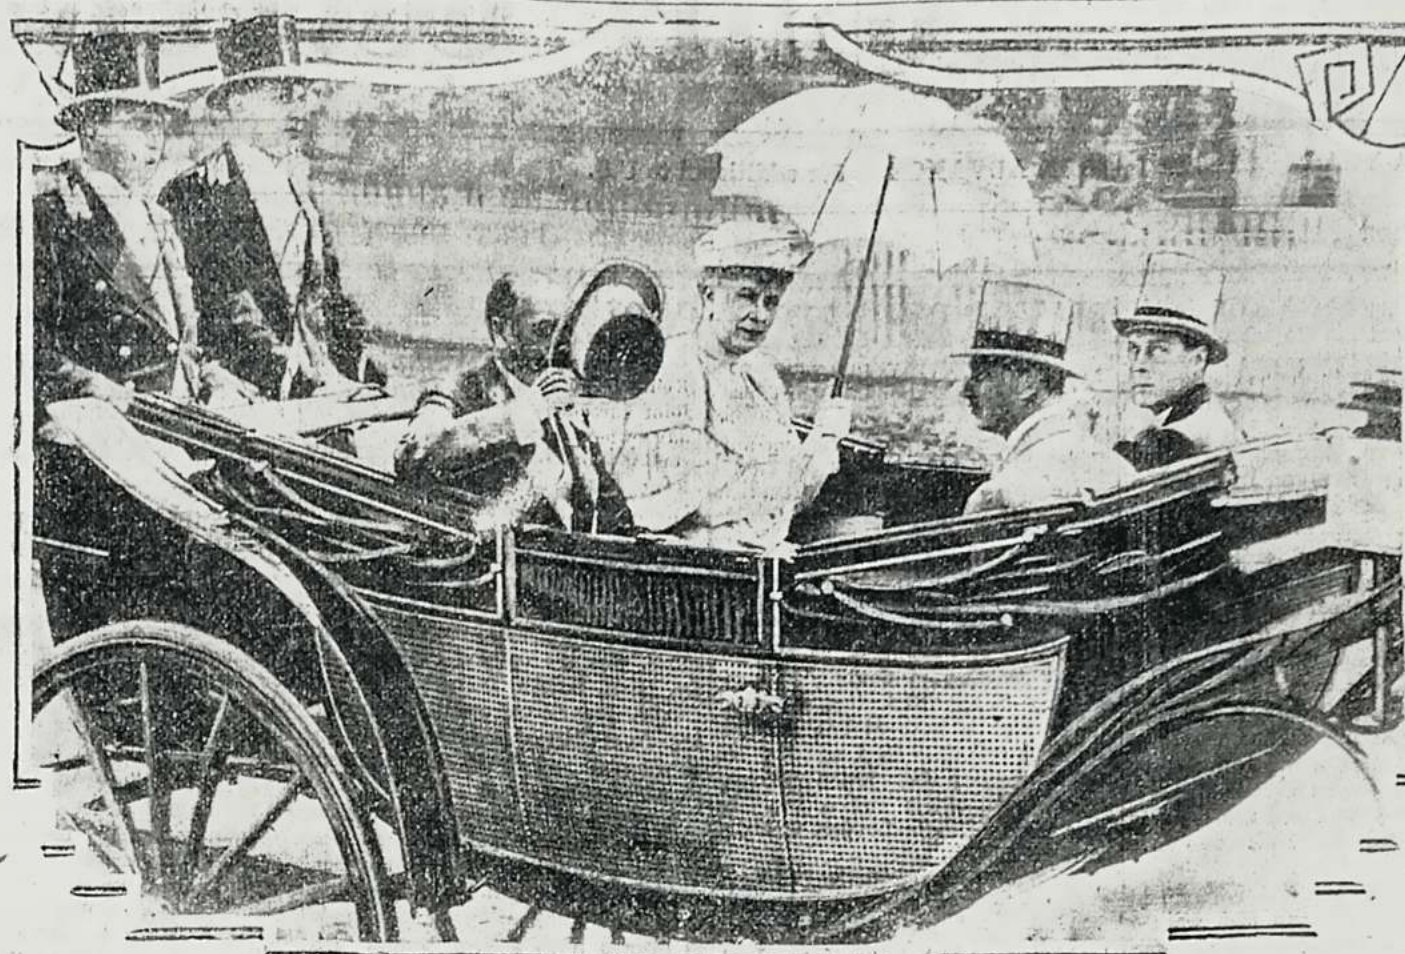

LEEDS—Live stock was turned out in poor condition this spring. Dry, hot weather has so affected pastures that little chance has been given to gain in condition. VICTIM LOSES FIGHT FOR LIFE

4 Year Old Windsor Boy Stricken With Leugaemia — Doctors Helpless

Windsor district is grieving with a mother and father sorrowing in the loss of their four-year-old son—victim of lymphatic leugaemia.

Only a few hours after his parents and friends had dared to hope the crisis had passed little Cecil Leighton, the curly headed son of a Windsor fireman, lapsed into unconsciousness and died as his parents and doctors stood by—powerless to fight the dreaded blood disease which medical authorities say is always fatal.

It is rarely found in a child, however, and for a long time the strange ailments manifested by the youngster puzzled attending physicians. Only within the last 10 days was the disease diagnosed after a hurried consultation among specialists.

The father's colleagues made a continent-wide appeal through newspapers for any possible help and promised the parents anything that could be done would be arranged.

Responses poured in from numerous parts of Canada and the United States. Prescriptions were rushed to Windsor but only an ordered diet, prescribed by a Detroit chemist, was considered helpful. For days the youngster appeared to rally and once again took interest in his surroundings and his toys. New hope was aroused for it appeared the boy was on the road to recovery.

Monday night, however, he suffered a relapse and remained unconscious until death late Tuesday afternoon.

MERCURY RISES AT MANY POINTS

Sections Of Ontario Are Warmest Areas In All Canada

Sections of central and eastern Ontario, on a seemingly hit-and-miss plan, were the high temperature areas for all Canada yesterday. Toronto recorded a mark of 91, Ottawa touched the top for the Dominion with 94 and other parts of the same areas reported comparatively moderate temperatures.

From the Maritimes, Western Canada and even from the Pacific Coast came reports last night of comparatively cool weather when judged in comparison with the heat-wave that suddenly struck Toronto and the other Ontario sections. In Toronto one casualty was reported as a result of the heat when George Mann, 21, suffered a sunstroke. He was removed to the Toronto East General Hospital.

Montreal reported a temperature of 86 and Quebec touched 82, the reports from east of the latter point showing a rapid decline. Interspersed throughout the hot weather areas were comparatively low temperatures, largely due to local conditions such as cooling breezes from lake districts.

Probabilities for to-day were forecast last night by the Meteorological Office as moderate to fresh winds; generally fair with possible thunder-showers; cooling towards night.

FOX PELTS SHIPPED TO LONDON FUR AUCTIONS

A second consignment of silver black fox pelts has reached the Prince Edward Island fur pool at Summerside from Hollywood, California, to be placed on sale at the fur auctions held in London, England. The pelts are reported to compare favorably with the better class pelts raised on Prince Edward Island, the home of silver fox fur raising. A change has been made in the method of packing pelts for overseas, noted a Canadian National Express official. Plywood is now largely used for the purpose as this guards against the danger of pressing, which has a tendency to damage the fur.

MANY ATTEND A.Y.P.A. EXCURSION

1300 On S.S. Cayuga — Local Deanery Was Represented

Young people from many Toronto parishes and representatives of other deaneries including Hamilton, Port Hope and Oshawa, sailed out into the moonlight at 9:30 o'clock last night when with 1,300 aboard the S.S. Cayuga put out into Lake Ontario from Toronto.

It was the Anglican Young People's Association with the recently elected president, Wallace Cross, as general convener, that staged this delightful excursion into the magic of the "Night Before Full Moon." Fairy moonbeams danced on the placid waters and lent unusual beauty to the skyline of Toronto with its myriad of dazzling lights and picturesque towers. On board daintily gowned young women and smart looking young men danced to the music of an excellent orchestra. For those who neither danced themselves or watched the dancing waters there was a cleverly arranged fun-provoking stage program. The excursion created a record for the A.Y.P.A. and is recorded as one of the best of the season by the Canada Steamship Lines.

MILLBROOK YOUTH IS REMANDED FOR SENTENCE

Sidney Henry, Millbrook youth, who was injured on June 14 at the corner of Belmont and Homewood avenues, Peterboro, when he was knocked off a bicycle in collision with Thomas Anthony's Truck, swore in police court that he was not riding a bicycle when he was injured.

He was charged with stealing the bicycle, owned by John Allison, 593 Bethune Street, which he was riding at the time of the accident. Anthony testified that Henry rode the bicycle into the side of the truck, several other witnesses testified that immediately after the crash they saw Henry "tangled up in the bicycle on the roadway."

However, the accused swore that he was walking along the street when he was struck by the truck. He could not explain how the truck came to hit him.

Magistrate Langley found him guilty but adjourned sentence for one week.

WAGE CUT IS REFUSED

Decision Of Canadian Railway Shopmen Conveyed To Roads

The Canadian branch of the railroad employees department of the American Federation of Labor, division No. 4, comprising 35,000 shop tradesmen, has informed the Railway Association of Canada, representing all Canadian railroads, that its members have undergone enough sacrifices in point of reduction in pay, lay-offs and reductions in working hours, and will not accept the proposed additional 10 per cent cut in basic rates, it was learned at Montreal Tuesday.

The workers announced their willingness to continue working for another year under the 10 per cent cut now in force, but stressed the fact that any new cuts are not justified. According to Charles Dickie, secretary of the shopmen, the next move is up to the companies. He stated they will probably apply to the Minister of Labor for a board of conciliation. A meeting of this organization will be held sometime next week, Mr. Dickie said, and the policies to be followed in the forthcoming negotiations will be decided on.

No statement could be obtained from the Railway association of Canada except the announcement that the decision of the men had been submitted to the different railroads affected.

HEARD ON THE STREET

WEDNESDAY, JULY 5.

What will the Parley accomplish?

It doesn't look as if they are going to get all the world's troubles ironed out at this Economic Conference.

It looks as if we'll still have to go on trying to find the money to pay taxes.

Oh, well, if they don't accomplish anything they've had a nice vacation and should be better able to get down to work on the home problems when they return.

The Durham County Music Festival Association held a meeting at Newcastle last night and several items of business were disposed of. The financial statement of the May Festival which was held in Port Hope was submitted and will be available for publication in a few days. The President, Melville H. Staples, presided and another meeting will be held next September.

When they watered the park last week with 300 gallons a minute making something over 50,000 gallons in the time they were at it; the grass got a pretty good soaking. That would be equal to a mighty heavy rain we're thinking.

Damage estimated at $5,000 was caused Tuesday evening when fire broke out in the hardware store of Henry D. Wilson, King street west, Oshawa. The blaze was discovered shortly before 8 o'clock, when flames were seen leaping from the rear windows of the store. The Fire Department battled for over an hour, using three lines of hose before the fire was under control. Traffic on King's Highway No. 2 during this period was diverted through city streets. It is believed the blaze started as the result of defective wiring in the elevator shaft. Stock in the rear of the building was destroyed, while goods on the main retail floor were considerably damaged by water and smoke.

The new tax rate in Lindsay was fixed at 45.9, as compared with 44.8 last year. The Council decided to collect taxes in two annual instalments and also to collect taxes early in the year and strike the rate in March, instead of July. The town will ask the County Council to meet in May instead of June, and School Board and Library Board estimates must be in by March.

THURSDAY, JULY 6
Did you win anything?
We really didn't want the pony for it has no rumble seat.

So you were one of the five thousand and who gave to charity — and the winners!

It seems as if some of us always contribute for the other fellow, not only in the draws and at the races, but in every day life.

"There is a destiny which shapes our ends" so we need not worry too much if the world's greatest statesmen didn't accomplish what they set out to do. Things will go on and we will continue to struggle to get food, raiment and a little happiness.

"The old order changeth" — when in heck will we get an order that will be perfect enough to last? Things that are too good and perfect seem to be dull and lack the universal appeal.

No wonder, long ago they had a saying, "It's too good to last." If you have a tree or flower, or anything lovely that you learn to love, it seems so soon to fade and die.

Although last week's rain eased things about the county, crops could stand a little more rain. The strawberry crop, which is now about through for the season, was down in its yield as a result of the drought but other crops suffered no extensive damage. The district hay crop is reported as good.

"There were six of them, dear. Don't you remember?"

FRIDAY, JULY 7.
They're down to work again!

The leaders of the Nations have decided to continue their deliberations. If they stick to the job and their agreements they may accomplish something yet.

If this Economic Conference does not succeed the world will lose some of its faith in this means of adjusting differences between the nations. Here's hoping they get things running smoothly and so well that everything won't go to pieces again as during the past four years.

Once upon a time we began to feel that the World War was never going to end but it did when the nations laid down their rifles and so too with this when the nations lay down the trade obstructions and have faith in each other.

The new heating boiler arrived for the Guide to-day and the old one, worn out by years of service, will be torn out to make room for the new one. It is sad to think that such a tremendous expenditure had to be made at this time but we all know that the public will be glad to see men being given employment and will make a special effort to pay all little accounts and as much of the big ones as possible.

Another heat wave is coming according to the Weather Man and the weather is predicted as fair and decidedly warm. Warnings are issued not to over-eat, do not drink ice cold drinks too freely and don't worry too much about the present heat.

The summer cold is as uncomfortable as the winter gripe and almost as dangerous. Light clothing is fine for the warm days but don't scorn a wrap on a cool evening and avoid drafts when the under clothing is damp with perspiration.

Check
A student had been spending freely and was short of cash. It was near the holidays, and he hated to write home for money. As a last resort he pawned his dress suit.

When the time came to leave for home, the suit was still unredeemed. He hurriedly scraped together enough cash to get it back, packed it in his bag, and was off.

At home his mother was helping him unpack.

"Henry," she asked, "what is this ticket on your coat for?"
"Why, mother," he replied, "I went to a dance the other evening and that is the cloakroom ticket."
She continued putting away his clothes. Finally she lifted the trousers. They too, were ticketed.
"Henry," she exclaimed, "what kind of a dance was that?"

DOUBLY PRIZED
In youth I thought a joy must be, Once snared, securely fettered;
(Youth swears by such mad fantasy, Unlesioned and unlettered!)

I dreamed of joys all set away, Like birds in cages, waiting To sing for me some future day; Such glad anticipating!

But, older grown, I now discern That wings are made for flying; Winced joys can never, near learn To find bars satisfying.

And so, to-day, all joys for me Possess an added sweetness; I prize their joyous quality, Now doubly, for its fleetness!

Interment was in St. George's cemetery. He was a well-known citizen of Haldimand Township, where he farmed for years. His wife died a few years ago after a long illness. POULTRY GREEN FEEDS

In vitamin and mineral content, alfalfa and clover show themselves to be the most satisfactory green feeds for poultry. Fresh or dry, these legumes are palatable and nutritious, the leaves of the alfalfa or clover if well cured serving as an efficient form of feed. Alfalfa meal, or better still, alfalfa leaf meal, from well cured plants is also a suitable kind of green feed mixed in the mash. — Dominion Poultry Husbandman.

ONTARIO MINISTER COWED BY VENGEANCE TAKEN FOR HIS BLISTERING SERMON

(From Winnipeg Free Press)

By C. E. LOUTH

Winnipeg church-goers may at times, become somewhat riled when their ministers "dish it out" a little too straight for them, but at least they hold their peace, and don't vent their wrath on pet poodles, purring pussies or other innocent dumb animals that their pastors may own.

But it's different down around Port Hope, Ont., for when Rev. A. S. Doggett, United Church clergyman, of Canton, a nearby village, handed out such severe criticism of the youth of the countryside that it made their face red, somebody promptly kidnapped his valuable Jersey cow, dipped it into a tub of tar, and then turned it loose again in the pasture.

But police immediately snapped into action, and before long charges of cruelty to animals faced four residents of the district. And though it was only a cow with a twisted tail

That they grabbed and soaked in an old tar pail, It landed the tormenters safely in jail,

Where they languish till later released on bail.

Poor Mrs. Cow

Discovery of this dirty trick, which was played on the innocent bovine, was made when Mrs. Cow, bellowing in pain and indignation, leaped about the pasture field, completely disregarding her friends and neighbors.

"Why are you so stuck up?" demanded a Jersey girl friend, somewhat annoyed at being snubbed.

"Mo-o-o-o!" bellowed the leaping Bossy, which, in cow language means "My goodness, but this tar burns!"

Hearing of her plight, officials of the Humane society hurried to the scene, and despite the fact that Mrs. Cow was painfully blistered all along her neck, sides and udder, succeeded in easing her agony and saving her life.

What happens the four believed responsible for the tarring, remains to be seen.

Winnipeggers, unlike their eastern cousins, do not go in for tar and feathering as a popular pastime. Or at least, they haven't done so for the past fifty years, according to police officials, when questioned on the pitch situation.

Them Days Is Gone Forever
Fifty years ago, however, things were different. Men were tough in those days, and when a Speaker of the legislative assembly of the North West Territories made what the boys considered a bum decision, they calmly tossed him into a pot of pitch, and rolled him in a feather bed!

Imagine his embarrassment!

But, since then Winnipeggers have become more civilized, and preachers who have a habit of handing it out with a vengeance to their congregations, need have no fear that their dogs, cats, cows, chickens, or whatever the case may be, will suffer for their owner's zeal in the pulpit.

BETHESDA

The lawn of Bethesda United Church decorated with flags and electric lights was the scene of a very successful garden party and strawberry festival last Thursday evening held under the auspices of the Ladies Aid of the church. Although it was an intensely hot afternoon, it was delightfully cool under the large shade trees on the lawn, which made a lovely setting for a garden party. Under the trees long tea tables, lovely with June roses, peonies and delphiniums were arranged, a color scheme being carried out at each table.

In the evening a game of softball was played between Cobourg and Port Hope girls' teams, resulting in favour of Cobourg.

As eventide came on and the many electric lights in the trees flashed on it was a very pretty scene. During the evening, the Bethesda congregation had an opportunity to meet their new minister, Rev. Mr. Smith and Mrs. Smith and to speak words of welcome. The program consisted of many musical numbers from the musical Barkwell family, Rossmount; readings and a solo Miss Laura Smart, Gores Landing, solos from Mr. Fred Ough and Mr. C. E. Stephenson, Port Hope, and Mr. Mehan, Baltimore. The Bethesda male choir also sang several numbers. The audience were very appreciative and were aroused to sincere enthusiasm at each solo and chorus, calling for encores many times.

The proceeds of the evening amounted to $103.

DEATH WAS ACCIDENTAL

So Decides Coroner's Jury Investigating Fatality East Of Cobourg

Investigating details of the accident occurring near Grafton on Monday, in which John Henry Wills, Haldimand Township farmer, lost his life, a coroner's jury at Cobourg returned a verdict of accidental death. Wills, who is a 63-year-old farm hand, employed on the farm of Uralan Drumri, was struck by a car driven by Donald Flora, according to evidence given at the inquest. Flora resides at 1352 Willard ave., Schenectady, New York.

Wills was knocked down while crossing the highway a few yards behind a hay wagon. Bleeding profusely from a deep scalp wound he was rushed to Cobourg Hospital where he died on Monday afternoon.

Dr. Hayden, who attended Wills following the accident, gave his opinion that death had been due to a fractured skull.

Flora stated that Wills became confused by the presence of two cars in the immediate vicinity and stepped directly into his. He had noticed a large hay wagon ahead of him on the road. Wills was just coming on the highway and looking east at an oncoming car, gave it his undivided attention. He broke into a run to get to safety, stepping into the path of Flora's car, he stated.

Cornelius Flora, Margaret Ware and Mrs. William Mallory, passengers in Flora's car corroborated his testimony.

The members of the jury were J. Walden, Clarence Flannigan, Charles Keenough, John Foster, H. Bolster, and H. Millar.

Army Of Farmers Fight Menacing Blaze Near Belleville

Fences and trees were completely burned and several houses and buildings were in danger.

Fear was expressed that the blaze would spread through the partially cured hay into the woods nearby. The blaze originated on the farm of Andrew Langstaff and spread to that of Jesse Sprung.

We are firmly convinced if the cash price were 10% less than credit that business would improve, because we'd be doing a cash business and not having to pay for the "dead beat" things would be cheaper.

Price cutting seems to have run its course—but there are a few yet who will only learn by bitter experience.

DISCOVERY ENDS FLU EPIDEMIC

The forthcoming issue of The Lancet, a medical journal to be published Saturday, will say that experiments carried out by three British doctors have led to the discovery of the primary cause of influenza.

The article asserts that as a result there can be no repetition of the major influenza epidemics such as occurred in 1918 and 1923, killing 15,000,000 persons, according to statistics.

Doctors Wilson Smith, C. H. Andrews and P. P. Laidlaw of the National Institute of Medical Research are said to have found that influenza is caused by a filter-passing virus they isolated by infecting ferrets.

The discoveries were said to corroborate and supplement discoveries made by research in the Rockefeller Institute, which developed valuable information of influenza from experiments on hogs. The article says, however, that the hogs were infected with a milder type of influenza which does not correspond to that attacking human beings.

It adds that the medical men now expect to be able to immunize human beings from the deadlier form.

HOT ON TRAIL OF BURGLARS

Door Of Safe, Stolen From Lakefield Station Found Near Bensfort Bridge

Police at Peterboro picked up the trail of burglars who last Friday morning broke into the C.N.R. station at Lakefield and carried away a 300-pound safe containing $60 in cash and 17 money order blanks that may be filled out for large amounts, when the door of the safe was found in a ditch on a lonely road near Bensfort Bridge, ten miles south of the city, in Northumberland County.

W. H. Hatherly, pump and fence repair man, found the door of the safe. Hatherly had car trouble and walked over to the ditch to locate a stone in order to jack up his car when he came upon the door.

He brought the door to Peterboro and informed Provincial Police of his discovery. John Meyden, C.N.R. detective, later found more parts of the stolen safe. It is evident that the burglars used some heavy implement to smash it open. The find has intensified the efforts of police to apprehend the burglars. It is understood the trail is growing hot.

RURAL FARM FAMILY EXPENSES

Few facts are available for reference on the cost of living in rural farm homes in Canada says the Economic Annalist, published by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. However, in a survey of 157 farms in the Red River Valley of Manitoba in 1931 by the Dominion Economics Branch, data on family living were obtained from 129 of the records. Cash expenditures per family averaged $658.32, while farm furnished items amounted to $430.42, making a total of $1,088.74 for the average cost of living during the year.

Cash expenditures were 60.47 per cent of the total, while farm furnished items averaged 39.53 per cent. Fully 49.12 per cent of the total goods and services was spent on food, the average expense for food being $534.84. Over half this amount was supplied from the farm in butter, eggs, milk, garden produce and meats. Clothing accounted for 9.58 per cent of the total, or an average of $104.32 per family. The average farm family spent $45.34 for health purposes; $37.70 on education; $44.29 on amusement, $20.01 on churches and charity, and $24.02, as half the amount spent on operating the automobile charged to family living.

STRONG POSITION OF ELDORADO

Sells Treasury Shares—Early Returns Seen From Production

Eldorado Gold Mines have disposed of its remaining treasury shares, with the exception of a block of 20,000 shares, to private interests, which will provide funds for its enlarged operation, according to announcement by H. M. Tarras, secretary-treasurer. Funds from the sale have been paid over to the company. While officials have not disclosed the price paid for the treasury stock it is understood to be between $3 and $4 per share.

This new financing places Eldorado in a strong position, and the treasury will be augmented in the future by the sales of silver, radium and other products from Great Bear Lake and Port Hope.

Officials state that approximately $100,000 has been expended this year on mining plant and equipment for the Echo Bay property and $70,000 on additional equipment for the Port Hope refinery. All the above equipment has been fully paid for and the company has approximately $190,000 remaining in the treasury and $86,220 in investments at current market prices. Liabilities, which include accounts payable and current expenses, amount to $60,000.

It also is reported that the directors recently have completed option sales on several outside mining claims at Great Bear Lake to New York interests for the sum of $200,000, the first option payments to start within two or three months.

The Port Hope plant, the secretary states, is now on a self-sustaining and profitable operating basis and is making weekly shipments of by-products to European markets. He points out that there is a ready market for all the uranium by-products the company can produce. Radium is being produced at regular intervals and a number of shipments already have been made and will be followed by others at frequent intervals. Officials state, however, that no information regarding radium can be divulged at this time.

Equipment for the silver concentrator is expected to arrive at Echo Bay within a week or ten days, when it will be immediately assembled and put into operation. A new assay plant has been taken in. Gilbert Labine, vice-president and managing director, left for the property on Friday night. At present 50 men are employed at the property and additional men will be taken on immediately.

NEW RULES ON PISTOL PERMITS

Laws Of Other Provinces Are Being Studied, Says Attorney General

Regulations respecting the issuing of permits to carry firearms will be issued within the next few days, Hon. W. H. Price, attorney-general has stated. Under the new act, the attorney-general has the power to designate who shall issue such permits. Heretofore it has been done by chiefs of police, magistrates and others. "Inquiries have been made as to what is being done in other provinces, with the idea of working out some uniform system to apply generally," said Mr. Price, "and this has delayed the compiling of the regulations."

HOTEL SALE IS ARRANGED

Genosha Hotel, Oshawa, Sold To Syndicate For $75,000

Sale of the Genosha Hotel, Oshawa, Ontario, has been arranged by London and Western Trusts Co. to an Oshawa syndicate for the sum of $75,000 of which $25,000 will be paid in cash and $50,000 in the form of a 6 per cent mortgage. Promoted by the defunct United Bond Co., the Genosha Hotel Co. issued $325,000 of 6½ per cent serial bonds in 1928. London and Western Trust Co. took charge of the semi-furnished hotel in 1930 as receiver and manager following default in bond interest payments. Operations were carried on at a loss.

THE IMPORTANCE OF SPRAYING

(Experimental Farm Note.)
Spraying is probably the most important operation of the average fruit grower. All other efforts towards the proper cultivation and growing of a satisfactory crop can be nullified very quickly by an inadequate or inefficient spraying program. There are few fruit crops which do not have their quota of insect pests and fungous diseases, which, if left uncontrolled, will take their toll of the grower's profits and may even cause a considerable net loss.

Timeliness and the proper material are two important factors in a sprayer's program. The spray cannot act as a cure; whether to control an insect pest or a fungous disease, it is nothing more than a preventive and to be this it must be applied before trouble starts.

Insect pests, such as biting insects like the codling moth (sidewind in apples) are controlled by stomach poisons, viz., arsenic in the form of arsenate of lead or calcium arsenate. Sucking insects, such as plant lice or aphids, are controlled by contact sprays like tobacco extract (Black Leaf 40), and fungous diseases, such as apple scab, are controlled by fungicides like lime-sulphur spray or Bordeaux mixture.

The majority of the fruit grower's troubles are controllable after and while the plant is in leaf, but there are a few insect pests, like oystershell scale, which are best controlled while the tree is dormant, that is, before it comes into bud. In this instance a very strong spray is used, such as concentrated lime-sulphur at the rate of one gallon to seven gallons of water. As such a mixture would damage the foliage of a tree, all later sprays are somewhat diluted to avoid this possibility.

As spray calendars, giving full directions, are available to all growers for the asking, it is not within the scope of these few lines to recommend specific sprays. It is the desire, however, to urge the grower to start at once to overhaul or get his spraying equipment ready, and to order for early delivery his materials for next year's spraying. Your first step should be to get the latest spray calendar for your district. Write at once to your nearest Experimental Farm and ask for a copy of the latest spray calendar available, with special reference to your particular fruit district.

SOIL AMENDMENTS

The agricultural value of any particular sample of peat or muck is dependent upon the percentage of nitrogen and organic matter which it contains, also upon its state of decomposition. Mucks, by reason of their being much further decomposed and broken down than peats, are to be preferred for soil dressings. Peat in its crude and raw condition cannot be expected to benefit a soil at once, save in such cases as it might improve its mechanical condition. These deposits are often distinctly acid or sour, and consequently it is frequently necessary to render them alkaline by composting with lime or wood ashes before the nitrogen can be made available for plants. This sweetening process may also be accomplished to a large extent by digging and allowing the material to lie for several months exposed to the air. Speaking generally, the application of peat and muck in the crude state is not to be advised, because, as already pointed out, their plant food does not exist in immediately available forms. Fermentation is necessary to set the plant food free.

LOCAL LADY GOLFERS WIN

Belleville Golfers Visited Port Hope Golf And Country Club Friday

Twelve ladies from the Belleville Golf Club came up to play a match with the ladies section of the Port Hope Golf and Country Club on Friday afternoon. The visitors were delighted with the natural beauties of the interesting local course but had to yield the honours of the day to the Port Hope team under the captaincy of Mrs. E. M. Thurber.

At the close of the match, a delicious high tea, arranged by Mrs. Robert Hume, was served in the clubhouse from daintily decorated small tables.

DROP IN LEVEL OF LAKE ERIE

Loss Of 7 1-2 Inches In June—Superior, Huron, Erie Higher

The levels of Lake Superior, Lake Huron, Lake Erie and the St. Lawrence River at Montreal were all higher last month than in June, 1932. Lake Ontario at Kingston was the only point showing lower levels, it being 7½ inches below last year. The report for June issued by the hydrographic service of the Department of Marine follows:

Lake Superior, at Port Arthur, during June was four inches higher than May and 3¼ inches higher than June, 1932.

Lake Erie, at Port Colborne, during June, was three-fourths of an inch higher than May and 2½ inches higher than June, 1932.

Lake Ontario at Kingston, during June was 1¼ inches higher than May and 7½ inches lower than June, 1932. St. Lawrence River, in Montreal harbor during June was 41 inches lower than May and four inches higher than June, 1932.

HIVE BEES AND POISON SPRAYS

One great advantage claimed for hive bees in spreading the pollen in apple orchards is that they alone of the possible apple pollinators can be artificially increased and evenly distributed in the orchards. There is no method of artificially increasing the population of wild solitary bees should their numbers become depleted from any cause, and, while investigators have succeeded in "domesticating" bumble bees, no one has ever suggested carrying out this experiment on a commercial basis. On the other hand, bee colonies may be obtained by rental or purchase. These furnish a ready method of providing orchard pollinators, where observation indicates a shortage of wild species. They can be so placed as to secure efficient distribution and in addition can be moved about at will as needed.

It may be pointed out at the outset, says the report of the apple pollination survey of Annapolis Valley, which was carried out by the Dominion and Nova Scotia Department of Agriculture, that the question of orchard pollination by hive bees in the valley is at present an academic one. Due to the widespread effect of poisoning from dusts and sprays, the hive bee population over square miles of the main orchard area is practically nil, and this district must depend upon wild forms for pollination. The period of bees poisoning extends from some time before the apple comes into bloom until some time thereafter, and when poison sprays for apple maggot are applied it may extend into August. Poisoning is frequently more severe shortly before and shortly after the bloom than during that period partly because more spraying or dusting is done at that time and partly because less bloom is then present, and the bees concentrate on bloom growing in or near the orchards.

These facts clearly indicate that when bees are to be placed in the orchard for pollination purposes it is advisable from all standpoints to do so only after the early varieties of apples are in bloom, and to remove the bees before the next poisoning application is made. Even this may not avoid bee-poisoning under all conditions, but it will at least reduce it to a minimum.

SODIUM CHLORATE KILLS POISON IVY

One Application Sufficient—Remedies Suggested For Counteracting Infection

Many holiday seekers start out each summer on a carefully planned holiday, with high expectations of regaining health and enjoying to the full outdoor life at a summer cottage or camp, only to have their plans upset and the holiday ruined by poison ivy infection caused by coming accidentally in contact with this poisonous plant.

It is no longer necessary to submit the members of the family to the dangers of possible infection from poison ivy, states Arthur H. Martin of the Ontario Department of Agriculture who is in charge of weed administration in the Province of Ontario. Poison ivy may be killed completely, roots and all, by one good application of a chemical weed killer.

Experimental work covering three years at the Ontario Agricultural College shows that sodium chlorate or a chlorate compound used at the rate of one pound of chemical to one gallon of water per hundred square feet of weeds, applied in the form of a spray, will kill 100 per cent. all poison ivy, provided spraying is done thoroughly. These chemicals may also be applied in the powder form in the evening when the plants are slightly moist with dew.

Sodium chlorate is an inflammable substance and should be handled with great care by the amateur. This material should be stored in air-tight containers and kept in a dry place. All mixing should take place away from buildings. After spraying is completed, the operator should wash his clothing and shoes. The dried spray on trouser legs or boots is liable to burst into flame from the friction in walking if not washed off at once. A little dye may be added to the solution so that the dried spray may be detected more readily on clothing, etc.

Poison ivy is a plant usually of low, bushy growth, but sometimes found trailing in leaf mould or climbing fences or trees. It is most readily identified by the leaves, which are arranged in threes in the same manner as strawberry leaves, but unlike the strawberry leaf in that they are smooth to touch. The strawberry leaf is quite hairy and velvety. The poison ivy leaves resemble the leaves of the Virginia creeper, but can be readily distinguished from this well known cultivated plant in that the Virginia creeper leaves are in clusters of five and the poison ivy in clusters of three. Early in the summer inconspicuous clusters of small white flowers appear and are followed on some plants by round whitish berries about the size of a pea.

As a protection when going among poison ivy, it is well to wash all exposed skin with a 5 per cent. solution of ferric chloride in water, allowing it to remain on. Persons accidentally coming in contact with poison ivy should wash thoroughly with laundry soap under running water and apply rubbing alcohol liberally.

There is no known specific cure for poison ivy infection. Relief can often be obtained, however, by daubing the infected parts with a 3 per cent. solution of potassium permanganate. All rubbing should be avoided and the infection prevented from spreading by painting with iodine around the edges of the sores and by using compresses soaked in a 2 per cent. solution of aluminum acetate or any other cooling substance, such as baking soda, boric acid, etc.

NOXIOUS WEEDS IN FARM LANDS

Noxious weeds in farm lands are enumerated and described in a new series bulletin on weeds and weed seeds published by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Some of the worst weeds are so prolific that relatively clean fields may be badly contaminated in two or three years of the weeds are allowed to go to seed. For instance, a single plant of wild mustard, stinkweed, foxtail, pigweed or campion produces from 10,000 to 20,000 seeds; worm-seed mustard about 25,000; shepherd's purse about 50,000; and tumbling mustard about 1,500,000. With such productivity soils become quickly infested, and only a careful examination can reveal the kinds and numbers of seeds. With this object in view, much important information from surveys of selected fields in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec has been obtained.

OTHER EDITORS' OPINIONS

JOINT CHURCH SERVICES

Lindsay will have at least two cases where churches will unite for July and August each minister officiating for both churches for one month while his brother of the cloth goes on a holiday. Services are held in one church in the morning and the other in the evening. Lindsay churches enjoying this happy relationship are St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and the Baptist Church, and the two United Churches.

This is an economical way of providing the minister with a holiday and is satisfactory all around.

The only regrettable feature is that church attendance falls sufficiently in the summer to permit two congregations to be seated in the one church. This, however, is the fault of the church members, not of the ministers or management, and is common with all churches.—Lindsay Post.

SEE ONTARIO FIRST

The vacation season is now at its height, and people are wandering afield to their favorite holiday resorts. In seeking pleasant holiday places, it is not necessary to go beyond the confines of the province of Ontario, far less the Dominion of Canada. Newspaper columns, however, record day after day the fact that a large number of Canadians wander into the United States or into other provinces, for their vacation.

The province of Ontario has within its boundaries a wide enough variety of scenic and other attractions to suit every taste. The great north country is open to those who like long holiday trips. Its lake resorts, nearer home can supply every need of the holiday maker who loves bathing and boating. Quiet restful country places abounding on every side. So why go beyond the confines of Ontario. Muskoka is calling, the lakeshore resorts of South Ontario have their attractions, and the northern woods and wilds are at the height of their glory. Ontario is worth exploring. See it first before seeking holiday places further afield.

HAVE TOURISTS MUCH MONEY?

We can recall having read at times of estimates showing the amount of money which tourists spent in this province. The figures have been impressively high; always have they hopped along into the class of millions, yes, many millions of dollars.

Perhaps on that account we have taken it for granted that tourists had a great deal of money with them; they would have it tucked away in pockets and in hiding places in the car or in the baggage. Otherwise they never could spend so many millions of dollars in this country.

That is why we were just a little taken back when reading of an accident near Thamesford, where a car from Brooklyn, N.Y., rammed a milk wagon and caused damage of $20. The matter went to police court at Ingersoll. Anna Wareczek was charged with driving recklessly, but she said it was not her car. Fred Cummings, one of the party, said it was his car, but there was a lien note of $150 against it. The people in the car had been at the fair in Chicago and were on their way back to New York; in between points they were doing a little touring in Ontario, entering at Detroit and going out at Buffalo on the way east.

But to get back to settling for the milk wagon. Having in mind those impressive million dollar figures, said to have been built from the spending of tourists in this land, we thought some person would strip a $20 bill from a great roll and then proceed. Not so. The Cummings person said he had $1.50 on his person, while another occupant of the car produced 50 cents; that made $2, and by a great deal of scraping there was $10 brought together in one pile, and some person gave a note for another $10. That set us to wondering if many of the touring cars we see are financed the same way, and if so, what is going to become of those million dollar estimates.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

LACK OF SUNDAY OBSERVANCE

Summer time is holiday time. People desire to rush about for the week-end and seem to have lost all sense of the great purpose of Sunday, says the Weston Times.

If you were to question the children of the day or the youth about the use of Sunday, they would say, "Why it is a holiday and the purpose is an opportunity to rush off to the lake or a summer beach for the weekend." They have little thought or regard for the true purpose of the holiday or the Sunday. They seem to forget that Sunday is a day of rest. These days were set aside to permit the people to worship the living God and the high festivals were great celebrations. To-day the idea is, get as much rushed into the holiday and Sunday as you can.

Sunday is a day that has wonderful possibilities for a national growth. If the people of to-day would get back to the proper idea and make this a day of worship and rest, there would be a different feeling in the world. What is needed is a general return of all people to their knees on Sunday in their respective churches. Then instead of rushing off madly for amusement and entertainment, why quietly get out in the open and rest from your labours. Think upon the wonders of creation and the great Creator who watches over everything. In times of adversity we fall on our knees. Why not bring ourselves into closer relationship with the living God by spending Sunday as it was intended, as a day of worship and a day of rest. Such observance will bring about quickly that true social order and proper adjustment of world affairs and personal life.—Bowmanville Statesman.

NEW CANADIAN APPLES

For the ulterior benefit of Canadian commerce, considerable progress has been made in a number of projects at the Horticultural Division of the Dominion Experimental Farms. The breeding of new varieties of fruits, vegetables and ornamental plants has been continued with promising new varieties blooming or fruiting for the first time last year, or reaching a stage when their value could be better determined. In this category are some of the promising apples, the Edgar, Fournier, Grover, Stonehenge, Macfar and Bancroft. A new yellow variety of corn has been named Dorisny. Ruby rhubarb increased very much in popularity during 1932, and among ornamental plants new varieties were evolved of lilacs, rosy bloom crab apples, roses, irises, lilies and early columbine. Two hardy bush roses were named U. P. Hedrick and Amy Hedrick.

HISTORICAL GARDEN ROSES

At the end of the eighteenth century, the China rose with its habit of continuous bloom was brought to Europe, says the Dominion Horticulturist, Dr. Macoun in discussing the probable origin of the beautiful hybrid perpetual roses in Canada. Before very long hybrids of the China rose with French and Provence roses were raised. They were called Hybrid Chinese, but took after their European parents in that they flowered only once in the season. These hybrids and the damask rose were then crossed and Rose du Roi, a damask perpetual, was introduced about 1819. This rose was called perpetual because it had a second blooming season. Six years later Gloire de Rosames appeared. Followed by rapid improvement of this class, and in the fifties such garden favourites as General Jacquemont and Jules Margottin were introduced. In Canada many of the hybrid perpetuals bloom once only in the season.

GRAND JURY SYSTEM ENDS

In Quebec—Criminal Procedure Simplified, Except In Montreal District

Grand Juries will cease to exist as from July 15 throughout the Province of Quebec, the legal district of Montreal being an exception. The change becomes effective as a result of the signing this week of an Order-in-Council drawn up under authority of legislation approved by the Quebec Legislative Assembly during its last session. Dominion authorities have approved amendments to the Criminal Code necessitated by the discard of the Grand Jury. The bill which the Legislature approved simply provided for the deletion of the words "grand" or "petit" where applied to juries and otherwise eliminating references to the two bodies. Dating from July 15, there will be one jury a trial jury. Grand Juries have been abolished in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and the problem is the subject of wide debate in Ontario.

HEAVEN

As a little child it seemed Heaven was very far away, Just a place of which I dreamed, Golden as a summer day, Sweet with angel choir and bright With the light of God's own face; White wings stirring, day and night, But a strange and distant place! Now I know that I was wrong In the picture which I made Of that heaven, sweet with song, Where the light of glory played. Now I know that I can clasp Heaven in my outstretched hand, All its joys within my grasp, All its peace at my command. Not one hate the days reveal, Not one shadow of a fear; Oh, what blessed bliss to feel Heaven is so very near.

NEW INDUSTRY TO COME TO CANADA

Montreal is to have a brand new industry—the manufacture of bay rum, formerly imported from outside Canada.

Dr. Emile Petit, director of the Iere Laboratories, Port of Spain, Trinidad, B.W.I., who sailed recently by the "vagabond Cruise" freighter, Colborne, made the announcement. He is returning to Trinidad after successfully negotiating the introduction of the new industry here.

Fifteen punchons of rum are already on hand for the enterprise. Other ingredients will include essence of bay leaves, which are got from the laurel plant. The Canadian factory will be a branch of the British company in Trinidad.

Bay rum is widely used as a toilet requisite. Some authorities claim it has the property of growing hair where bald spots begin to become conspicuous.

Egbert was the first king of all England; he reigned from 827 to 839.

POACHERS GIVE KEEPER A BATH

Series Of Arrests Bring Revenge On McLaughlin Employee At Oshawa

Through the activities of N. Whitney, farmer and gamekeeper, several poachers had been haled into Oshawa police court recently for trespassing on the fishing preserve of R. S. McLaughlin and W. F. Cowan, four miles north of Oshawa.

But according to a story current in East Whitby township the poachers have had their revenge. Whitney is generally well armed as he patrols the preserve but the other day when he accosted a pair of burly trespassers he was carrying no weapon.

The men promptly fell upon him, and although a doughty fighter the game-keeper soon found himself in the very creek whose trout he protects.

BY VALLEY AND HILL

By forest and plain, by valley and hill, Ever changeful, the road I must travel still; With never a day through the sunlit land, With meadow lark singing on either hand, But there must be seasons of groping on Through forests whose branches obscure the dawn With never an hour on a high hill's crest And the tides of rapture a-flood in my breast, But there must come times when the thick mists rise, And the valleys lie dim before my eyes. By forest and plain, by valley and hill, Even so through the world I must journey still With never a lift to life's happy heights But is reached through some valley of lost delights. Thus the plan has been ordered and thus must remain By valley and hill, by forest and plain.

The Guide Story

"There now, Miss Mayne, you can post me reports about Lillian, and use the other stamps as you like till I come down again and see how our jaunt of to-day has agreed with her."

After which they returned to the launch which had taken them over, and bade the man wait at the foot of the steps.

"If Lillian is none the worse for to-day's excitement, he whispered to Margaret, "I will arrange for this man, Turner, to come across for you whenever you hoist a signal. Now, here is your little cargo"—placing on the hall table the various purchases he had made. "I brought a specially nice brand of sweetmeats down with me, as Lillian does not care for 'chocs,' and I was not sure of the resources of Rivermouth. Just a minute, while I fetch it from my room." And he disappeared, to return shortly with one of those sumptuous boxes Margaret had seen in shop windows, but no nearer.

In a minute his deft fingers had opened and displayed the tempting contents.

"Now, Lillian, try if you like these better than chocolate," he said, slipping a luscious-looking filbert nut of marzipan into her mouth before handing the box to Margaret. "Sample and criticize, Miss Mayne," suggested. "Too many sweets are not good for Lillian, so you can share and share about with her. Better than chocolates are they, little sister?" he asked, turning back to her.

"Very nice; I'll have another, please," she said, holding her hand out for one.

"That's right, then. Now I'll love you and leave you," he said, with a satisfied nod. "I have a business appointment at an early hour to-morrow and must not be too late back. Will you come down to the launch with me, Miss Mayne? Lillian ought to keep quiet."

Margaret could not refuse his request, and once outside the room he said feelingly—

"You cannot tell what a comfort it is to me to have you in charge of that poor child! I was so afraid it would be a choice between some dull middle-aged person, a mental nurse, or some restless, excitable young flapper. I was really only endeavoring to see what you would say; but you are ideal!"

Having held out his hand in parting, Margaret could not refuse to put her own into it; moreover, he had spoken with such feeling that she could not resent the long, close pressure of his fingers, before she could release them with the quiet words—

"You may rely on my doing my best for Lillian, Mr. Bennett."

"I am sure you will. I have arranged for Taylor to fetch and carry your letters twice a week, instead of once only. If you will write your next, I will come down again, as soon as I can, and bring one of the doctors with me, if possible. Good-bye, and may Heaven reward you. And with that he stepped down into the launch, waved his hand, and Margaret turned to go up the steps.

CHAPTER VI.

On Margaret's return she was not surprised to find Lillian tired and drowsy, while in a few minutes she became so heavy with sleep that Margaret had her work cut out to get her undressed and into bed.

Being rather tired herself with the change and pleasure of the afternoon, she soon fell asleep and was dismayed to find it already half-past eight, their usual breakfast time, when she awoke the next morning.

Plunging on a wrapper, she hurried through the open door into the invalid's much-darkened room, to find her still lying in apparently the same position as when she had left her last night.

With a sudden pang of dread, Margaret bent over her, to find to her great relief that she was breathing all right, though she made no reply when spoken to.

Very gently she shook her, saying—

"Lillian, Lillian dear, aren't you going to get up?"

The only answer was a mutter of annoyance, accompanied by a frown; so, satisfied for the present, Margaret hastened back to dress, making a speedy toilet, and, after peeping in to find the other still asleep, ran downstairs just as Mrs. Taylor was taking in the tea-pot.

"Thought you'd be late this morning after gallivanting about with Mr. Bennett yesterday, so I didn't hurry to bring in breakfast."

It was so unusual for her to speak without being spoken to that Margaret was pleasantly surprised at such a considerate remark and answered readily—

"Well, I did oversleep myself, I own; while Miss Bennett was so sound I hadn't the heart to disturb her. She just spoke, but evidently wants to sleep on."

"Best let her lie, I should say," was Mrs. Taylor's comment; "and I know a bit about sick folk, or I shouldn't be here."

"You mean you were once a nurse?" asked Margaret, her innocent eyes raised to the woman in more natural interest with the sudden idea that that was why Eustace Bennett had chosen Mrs. Taylor to be her.

But as the latter's own eyes met that clear, girlish gaze, they dropped suddenly, and she answered, in her usual dour tones—

"I mean just what I say, neither more nor less; that I know a bit about nursing, and shouldn't never disturb a patient like Miss Bennett if I were you."

"Very well," returned Margaret, with that little air of dignity, she had used towards Eustace Bennett. "I will just have my own breakfast quickly, and take her some afterwards."

Whatever other drawbacks there might be, the food and cooking proved for them were excellent. Fruit, eggs and fish were all on the table, so having enjoyed with despatch a delicious little fried sole, together with bread, butter and marmalade, knowing pretty well by now the invalid's tastes, Margaret set an orange, together with her usual tea, egg and thin bread-and-butter, on a small tray and carried it upstairs.

By this time Lillian had shifted her position; she half opened her eyes on the other girl's entrance, and presently allowed herself to be coaxed into sitting up.

"Oh, dear, what a bother you are, Margaret," she yawned. "I don't want anything to eat."

"Then have some tea first," suggested Margaret.

Lillian took a sip and made a grimace.

"Horrid tea, and my mouth's all horrid!" she grumbled.

"Then have the orange I'll feed you with it," said her patient companion and gave it to her bit by bit.

"That's better," sighed Lillian, when it was all gone. "You are an angel, Margaret, you—but—I am—so sleepy!" And with another yawn she snuggled down into the bed again.

As well as she could, Margaret straightened the clothes, tidied the room and carried away the tray. Then she came back and sat down by the window, prayer-book in hand.

Eustace Bennett was evidently right. Any little excitement and getting about were bad for his sister if it made her so tired and exhausted as this. Poor Lillian! It was disappointing, too, for it would mean the experiment could not be repeated—that they would have to remain quietly on the island.

Margaret wished now she had been content to wait a while before saying anything, or that Eustace had not suggested going across so soon.

Her conscience was pricking her a bit, too. After her first mention of church she had forgotten to say anything more about it, and this was Sunday!

It was quite true that beneath Lillian's window boats were going to and fro, while on the sands visible under people were enjoying themselves and also bathing in the sea.

But Margaret had been taught better, and with a rush of deep longing her heart went out to that sweet mother who had trained her in all that was good. Through soft tears she turned in her prayer-book to those beautiful psalms which had been mother's stay and comfort in all her troubles.

The day was a long one, for Lillian slept through most of it, refusing all food, and drinking only a little milk or lemonade, and Margaret was afraid to leave her.

Mrs. Taylor came into the room once or twice.

"Over-tired," was her verdict. "Let her alone, to sleep it off."

But when the sleepiness lasted into the next day Margaret grew really alarmed, and said—

"Mr. Bennett told me you knew how to signal for a doctor, Mrs. Taylor, if his sister were ill. Don't you think we ought to send?"

Looking down, Mrs. Taylor ran her finger along the edge of the table before replying—

"Don't think so—not in her case. Why not write Mr. Bennett and tell him about her? Taylor would take the letter over quick 'to' catch the evening's post. She's a bit brighter than yesterday, you know, and I guess will be better still to-morrow. We don't want to bring any doctor here on a fool's errand."

Margaret knew of one doctor she would be very glad to get there on any sort of errand, but what she said was—

"Very well. If you think there is no reason for immediate anxiety—" "Certain sure of it," interrupted Mrs. Taylor.

"Very well," said Margaret again. "Then I'll write at once, if Mr. Taylor will take it to the post," and very soon had written a note stating shortly and clearly how sleepy Lillian had been since his visit on Saturday.

That day, also, she stayed indoors, but by Tuesday the invalid began to wake up a little, took more nourishment, and when half-dressed, let Margaret tuck her up on a couch by the open window, where again she fell asleep, just as Mrs. Taylor came to the door.

"You ought to go out a bit," she said to Margaret. "You've been in since Saturday and I don't want two of you sick on my hands. I'll sit with her a bit—you can take an hour."

"Would you? Oh, well, I would be glad," said the girl gratefully. "I did not like to leave her alone"—and without waiting for coat or hat she slipped away into the ward, and blessed air.

Walking much more rapidly than she had ever ventured to do with Lillian and thinking she would like to get as far as possible across the island, she must have gone a full mile along the charming road ere she caught sight of someone advancing towards her—the someone being in clerical dress, as she soon saw. Then, when, within a yard or two, one of the pleasantest voices she had ever heard called out—

"I hear someone coming, but I am blind. Will you please tell me who you are?" And with a little shock of surprise she answered—

"My name is Margaret Mayne and I am staying at Tamarisk House as companion to Miss Lillian Bennett."

"Then you are the very person I was wanting to see," came the cordial reply, with an equally cordial handshake as Margaret gave her fingers into those outstretched towards her. "Is Miss Bennett with you?"

"No. I am sorry to say she has not been well this day or two, so the housekeeper offered to sit with her while I came out awhile. But how do you know my name, or anything about me?"

The blind clergyman smiled as he answered—

"Through Dr. Basil Knight. Are you quite alone, Miss Mayne?"

"Oh, quite. Not another soul with miles, I should think."

"Good. Then let me give you this note, enclosed in one to myself this morning; and will you read it at once?"

Only too gladly did Margaret comply, and her heart beat to suffocation beneath those unseeing eyes as she read—

"Margaret, my own darling—Just as your letter came to hand I learned by happy chance that the Rev. Frank Waterford, one of my father's and my own best friends, is living on Tamarisk Island, and I want you to tell him our secret, dearest, so that you, too, may feel you have a friend at hand. Use your own discretion about letting the Bennetts know that he is my friend."

"I am glad to learn that Lillian is better and that her brother came down to see you. It is no dream that we belong to each other, but a blessed fact. God bless and keep you always."

"Your devoted

"BASIL."

Hurriedly glancing through the words that seemed to her written in gold, she thrust the note away into safety, and said, in a happy voice—

"Oh, Mr. Waterford, how lovely to know you are—Basil's friend! He asked me to marry him, just before I came away and it all seemed so wonderful. I did not want the Bennetts to know yet awhile—but he has asked me to tell you."

"Thank you. I am honored by your confidence and am very glad to know it. God bless you both, my dear child. Now, is there anywhere we could sit down and talk awhile? I want you to tell me as much as you care to about yourself. Knight's note was a very short one, as I am dependent on the man who looks after me for reading my letters."

"There is a fallen tree here," said Margaret, and guiding him to it, told him her little history, helped out by a question now and again—particularly her relationship with the Bennetts, and Lillian's pathetic story.

"Poor child!" he said, pityingly. "Knowing what the loss of sight means, I trust hers may yet be saved. Do you know the name of the specialist she is under Miss Mayne?" "Yes—an Egyptian, a Doctor Rao, Mr. Bennett said he is cleverer than any English doctor."

For some reason, or other, there was quite a long silence after she had said this, before her new friend made answer in a curious tone.

"Really? Yet it is difficult to better the best of our English doctors. Rao is quite a common name in Egypt. I was chaplain there a while before I went into the wilder parts of the country as missionary."

"And was it by an accident you lost your sight also?" asked Margaret, diffidently. "Oh, I am impatient to ask that."

"Not a bit. It was not quite an accident," came the answer, in a dry tone. "Missionaries meet with some queer experiences, you know. To go back to Miss Bennett. I know a little about doctoring, and she ought not to be allowed to get too sleepy. You say you have written to tell her brother?"

"Yes. I wrote yesterday."

"Well, I should like to come over and see you both, and as a blind and middle-aged parson no one can find fault with that—even in these heathenish, scandal-mongering days. Being of no use anywhere else, I take the services as well as I can at the tiny church across the island. So you can tell that gloomy housekeeper I was coming to call when we chanced to meet."

"Won't you come on now and rest, and have some tea, Mr. Waterford? Do!" suggested Margaret.

But he shook his head.

"Not to-day, I think, my child. But all being well I will come over about four o'clock this day week and if Mrs. Taylor dislikes parsons, and shuts the door in my face, I shall sit on the steps and wait till you come to me."

"Oh, Mr. Waterford! You surely—"

"My dear child," he said, laying his hand on her arm with a little laugh, "we parsons have to be prepared for all sorts of treatment. Now, good-bye, and Heaven bless you." And with that he walked as rapidly and easily away as if his sight were quite good.

CHAPTER VII

With a glow of sweet warmth at her heart, Margaret took out her lover's little note and read it through again and again before starting on her homeward way.

It was so wonderful to have him thinking of her, caring for her whatever befell; and this new assurance of that care and thought, together with the unexpected appearance of his friend on the scene, made Margaret realize all at once how very lonely and anxious she had felt her position to be with no one at hand except that unfriendly housekeeper and her shifty husband.

Naturally, the unexpected interview with the blind missionary had detained her a good bit and though now she made what haste she could, Mrs. Taylor met her with a scowl and the greeting—

"Taken good measure for an hour haven't you, Miss Mayne? You forgot I had my own work to do, I suppose?"

"I am very sorry," apologized Margaret, "but I really forgot the time a bit, and then hurried back as fast as I could."

"Easy to forget when other people are looking after your business," retorted the woman, frowning out of the room, and Margaret let her have the last word; she certainly did not want to risk a quarrel with anyone of that stamp.

Lillian was not likely to have given trouble, for she only just now opened her eyes, with a cautious—

"That you, Margaret dear?"

"Yes Lillian. Have you had a nice sleep?"

"Not very. I woke up to see Mrs. Taylor in the room, poking about. She was very quiet, but she opened my drawers and then went into your room and I could hear her opening and shutting yours. Then she came back and raised my eyelid. I was frightened, Margaret, but I pretended to be asleep."

"Lillian, darling," exclaimed Margaret, startled and uneasy, "are you sure you were not dreaming?"

"Quite, quite sure. It is true that I have had all kinds of dreams lately—heavy, horrible dreams—sort of nightmares. But this wasn't a dream. I was wide awake, and longing for you to come back."

"You poor dear!" Margaret bent to kiss her warmly. "I wouldn't have left you if I had known. But you see you haven't been very well since we went over to Rivermouth on Saturday, so, as I hadn't been out since then, Mrs. Taylor offered to stay with you for an hour."

"And scolded you because you were a few minutes gone? What day is it, then? Tuesday? And I have slept all this time and kept you by me indoors!"

"That is nothing, Lillian dear. Is it not to keep you company that I am here? And after what you tell me I should be sorry I left you this afternoon—only—Would you like me to tell you a secret or two?"

"Your secrets? Oh, Margaret, yes!"

"Well, partly your secret, too—a most surprising one. For as I was walking along, suddenly I saw a clergyman coming towards me, and it turned out he was blind—a broken down missionary who was coming to call on us. And who do you think had asked him to call?"

"Not Eustace?" said Lillian dubiously.

"No, oh, no! But Doctor Basil Knight, because—because—" And laying her cheek down beside Lillian's Margaret whispered her precious little love-story into the ear of her new friend.

"Margaret! Oh, I am so glad about you and your Basil—he is such a dear! He seems more of a brother than Eustace does nowadays. Eustace seems so altered since he went to Egypt. To think of this friend of Doctor Knight being on this island and coming to tea with us next Tuesday! What a difference it will make!"

So, for the first time, Lillian was led on to speak of her own love-story with its tragic ending; after which they kissed and cried together, as some girls will.

Margaret, however, soon stopped the tears, for fear of her friend's eyes, and, having bathed her face, Lillian declared herself well enough to go down to tea, over which they planned to picnic in the wood on the morrow.

When to-morrow came, however, there was neither stroll nor picnic, for the weather broke in the night—broke with a thunderstorm that terrified poor Lillian beyond words.

Margaret minded it not at all, though lightning ran down the fire-irons in the grate as it played about the room; while the thunder crashed overhead, or rolled away into the distance, only to return again far into the next day.

Utterly unafraid, she longed to stand at the window and watch the splendour, but had to draw the blind for Lillian's sake, as the frightened girl clung to her at every vivid flash or heavy crash.

She was just soothing her in the midst of the most terrific of all when, looking up, a little cry was surprised from her own lips.

For there, in the very middle of the room, having entered as quietly and suddenly as if the lightning had flashed him thither, stood a complete stranger, regarding them with a peculiar smile on his darkly handsome face and the air of one who had a perfect right of entrance.

Before Margaret had time to recover from the alarm of his appearance in such a manner and at such a time, he had begun to say, in quite good English and a remarkably soft voice, but with a foreign accent—

"Don't be frightened, my dear young lady. You look as startled as if the Prince of Darkness had suddenly appeared on the scene."

At the first word, Lillian raised her terrified face from her friend's shoulder, and, tilting the shade, exclaimed—

"Doctor Rao! You here, and in this awful storm?"

"Storm, do you call it, my dear child?" he said taking her by the hand and leading her to the chesterfield. "Why, in Egypt we should not give a second thought to such a display of crackers as this. Surely you were not frightened?"

He had seated her now, taking his own place beside her, still holding her hand; while Margaret stood by to watch, vividly remembering what Morgan had said of "the dark eye doctor who gave her the creeps."

Continuing to talk about nothing in particular, in a curiously low, soothing tone, he gently removed Lillian's shade, and with long, supple fingers held open the poor eyes that winced and tried to close against the light. Next he took a small instrument from his pocket, through which he examined them again, talking all the time in that soothing murmur of which, near though she was, Margaret could not always catch the gist. Whatever the words might be, however, they appeared to have a wonderful effect on Lillian, and to make her quite forgetful of the lighting and thunder that still played around the house, though the storm would seem to have spent the worst of its fury; and it was not till she was quite calm that with a final pat of her hand, he took any notice of Margaret's watching all the process with absorbed interest.

Turning round with a smile, he rose to his feet and then, face to face, her eyes met his for the first time, as he said softly—

"So this is the Miss Mayne of whom I have heard, who has come here to look after my little patient."

You will prefer it,

The words were simple enough, but the effect on the girl to whom they were addressed was not simple at all.

For a moment she held her breath, with the curious feeling that she was being drawn somewhere—towards something pleasant, irresistible, she knew not what, as of invisible hands drawing her down, down into a well of dreams, where all consciousness would be lost.

It was pleasant, it was delightful, but a saving instinct warned her of danger, and it needed all her will-power to resist, pull herself together, blink her eyes and draw a deep breath before she could answer.

"Yes, that is my name, Doctor Rao, and Mr. Bennett has engaged me as companion to his sister."

"Mr. Bennett made a careful choice. He tells me you wrote to him in some concern about my patient's condition since his visit here on Saturday. Please tell me about it in your own words, Miss Mayne?"

So saying, Doctor Mithra Rao leaned towards her, so that Margaret instinctively again raised her eyes, and met his full.

Very wonderful eyes they were, for even as she looked into them, fascinated again in her own desire, the black pupils grew larger and larger, till they nearly covered all the coloured part of the eye; and as they did so she smiled slightly, but such a smile that she instantly looked out of the window.

That instant broke the spell that would otherwise have enslaved her, but cost her such an effort that she had much ado to keep her voice steady before she made reply—

"Yes. After Mr. Bennett's return I grew concerned about his sister's condition, so I sent a report, according to his wish. Miss Bennett lay like a log for over twelve hours that Saturday night and remained very heavy and drowsy for another twenty-four hours; and I could not suppose that such heavy sleep was either good or natural, especially as she refused nourishment and complained of a nasty taste in her mouth."

This statement made, Margaret ventured to glance at him again, and was rather startled to see that those great black pupils had now contracted to the size of mere pin-points.

What, oh, what had she once read about people who could make the pupils of their eyes grow large or small at will?

Vainly she tried to remember, while Doctor Rao replied smoothly—

"You appear to be a very observant and thoughtful young lady and in ordinary cases no doubt what you say is right. But you must remember, Miss Mayne, that Miss Bennett is still suffering from the effects of great shock, for which any nerve-specialist worth his salt would recommend entire rest and quiet. Instead of which, just as my treatment was beginning to work, down comes Mr. Bennett and, out of mistaken kindness, takes her racketting about last Saturday—with what result you know, and anyone with a grain of knowledge could have foreseen. As a result, her eyes and her heart have both suffered, and are likely to suffer in consequence. While, should the experiment be repeated, I will not answer for the result and shall be tempted to wash my hands of the whole case."

Colder and colder grew his voice, till Margaret felt as if she had some how incurred his seriousness and deserved censure. Doubtless, Eustace had made out that it was she who was yearning for the diversion that had had such serious consequences. But before she could think what to say, Lillian put in, quite eagerly—

"Doctor Rao, please do not talk like that. I am quite, quite content to remain quietly here."

"Exactly," he said, with a curious smile, laying those long, supple fingers of his over hers. "You are the best of little patients, but that does not prevent Miss Mayne getting fingered and bored."

The hot blood rushed in swift tide to Margaret's face, but a tin she contrived to keep her voice steady as she said—

"Pored or not, I am content to abide by what is good for your patient, Doctor Rao."

"That so?" he inquired, begging

those magnetic eyes of his once more on hers; and this time, putting out all her will-power, she met them bravely a moment, as he went on to say, "If that is indeed, so, Miss Mayne, we must continue to trust our patient to your care; and here," he continued, drawing a very small phial from his pocket, "is a special and valuable eye-lotion I want you to use for Miss Bennett. It is only to be one drop at a time in each of the eyes—she has a dropper. And here is a box of pills—one to be taken three times a day, immediately after meals. For, you see, one of the complications that have baffled us in Miss Bennett's case is that the medicine given for the eyes tries the heart, so we have to counteract one with another. Mr. Bennett will be coming down again quite shortly, so you can report to him. And I must now say good-bye."

"Will you not stay to lunch?" suggested Lillian wistfully. "It must be nearly time."

"Another day, dear child," he said, pressing her hand between both of his. "An important consultation awaits me at five o'clock. I must hurry back to London. Good-bye to you both. Be faithful to your charge, Miss Mayne; she is very precious."

A last close pressure of Lillian's hand, a distant how towards Margaret, and he was gone—almost as quietly as he had entered—so quietly, with such an uncanny effect, that it gave her the idea that, had the sun been shining ever so brightly, the form of Doctor Mithra Rao would have cast no shadow.

"Isn't he a dear?" exclaimed Lillian enthusiastically, as the door closed noiselessly behind him. "I think he is the kindest and cleverest man I ever met. Don't you think so, Margaret?"

"It is his silence that struck me most," returned her companion, forcing a little laugh. "Never a sound as he came in or went out. Have you had these drops before, Lillian?"—taking up the tiny phial.

"I'm sure I don't know. Very likely. They've tried dozens of remedies," she answered, a trifle pettishly, and with an incautious movement of her hand, swept the wee phial off the table.

Margaret gave an exclamation of dismay as she stooped to pick it up.

"Oh, Lillian dear, you have knocked down your eye-drops! The glass is broken, and it is nearly all spilt. Oh, dear, I wonder if Doctor Rao is gone. I must see if I can catch him, if—"

POLICE COURT

Charged with being intoxicated on Haynard street on Friday night, Thomas Gorman, Montreal, pleaded guilty in police court at the Town Hall here this morning before Magistrate W. A. F. Campbell and was released on suspended sentence. He was arrested by Chief Constable Thomas Murphy and spent the night in the local cells.

Accused told that he was a seaman and met a friend near the tracks and the pair promptly proceeded to wax merry on that ever-common beverage—wine. It is alleged that Gorman was asking for air at various houses and when refused, used considerable profane language.

DEBORAH

(International Uniform Sunday School Lesson, July 16th)

GOLDEN TEXT: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—Psalm 46: 1.
LESSON PASSAGE: Judges 4: 4-10, 13-15; 5: 1-3.

TO WOMEN

For you, too, to battle go
Not with the marching drums and cheers,
But in the watch of solitude
And through the boundless night of fears.

And not a shot comes blind with death,

And not a stab of steel is pressed
Home, but invisibly it tore
And entered first a woman's breast.

A WOMAN AS JUDGE, 4

For a period of four hundred years the Israelites were governed by rulers called judges. In the catalogue of notable names of one woman appears, that of Deborah. She was a prophetess, able to read the signs of the times, and express them in song and poetry. She was a wife, but Lailah's only title to fame is that he was the husband of Deborah. She did not think that her place was in the home; her nation had been oppressed under Sisera for twenty years and the men were content to endure the humiliation. Deborah became the leader of those who chafed under the foreign yoke. She held court in the open air under a palm tree and the children of Israel came up to her for justice. She settled their disputes and doubtless seized every opportunity to discuss the national situation with the litigants so that they would take home a message that would prepare the patriots for action. Her qualifications for office were her ability to think, to lead, to impart her patriotism to others. She gained great influence over the Israelites just as Joan of Arc in later years was able to rally the French. Perhaps her actions were criticized as unlady-like but her brave spirit transcended conventionalities.

TEACHING COURAGE TO A GENERAL, 6-9

Barak receives honorable mention in the roll call of heroes in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, a distinction which he owes wholly to Deborah. He lacked initiative to strike a blow, preferring to be daunted by difficulties rather than risk all for liberty. The rebuke of his pusillanimous spirit came from a woman, one who was not a warrior at all. She sent him a message that was the equivalent to the presentation of a white feather. "She sent and called Barak... and said unto him, 'Hath not the Lord God of Israel, commanded, saying, Go and draw unto mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thousand men?' She predicted that Sisera could be drawn out to the river Kishon, there to be defeated with his chariots and his multitude. Even after this challenge and prediction, Barak displayed cowardice, stating that he would not go without Deborah. The general admitted his need of Deborah's presence to keep up his courage. "I will surely go with thee: notwithstanding the journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honor; for the Lord shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman." Shamed into action by her taunts Barak resolved to strike. Credit for the determination is due to Deborah; Barak merely followed. "And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kedesh. His timorous spirit sustained by the presence of the prophetess, Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh. He himself went up with ten thousand men, and Deborah went up with him. Here and there through the narrative a sentence is inserted to show that Barak was general in name only; the real leader was Deborah.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY, 13-15

It was Deborah who chose the hour for the battle to commence. She said unto Barak, "Up; for this is the day in which the Lord that delivered Sisera into thine hand; is not the Lord gone out before thee? So Barak went down from Mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him." Soon the enemy were routed and the leader, Sisera, fled away on foot. Barak had the honor of being victor but the credit was really due to Deborah.

In recent years there has been much discussion as to the place of women in military affairs. Of their courage there is no doubt, witness the fortitude of nurses in bombed areas or the fearlessness of the Russian Women's Legion of Death. To woman's power of sacrifice let the War testify. Or this incident might give rise to a debate on the place of women in government. Clearly Deborah shows that ability is not limited to one sex. It would also be fitting to mention what public men owe to the unrecognized assistance of their wives. But let the emphasis of the lesson be laid upon the place of women in the Church. It was Deborah's faith in God that gave her such confidence and courage. "Hath not the Lord God commanded?" "Is not the Lord gone out before thee?" Her hymn of triumph began, "Praise ye the Lord." Should not the fidelity of women in religion shame the men into greater activity? Barak fought, spurred on by the example of a believing woman. Can full-grown men be content to have their religion remain "in the wife's name?" One woman missionary stayed in a far area to administer relief when all the male consuls fled. It is certain that an ever increasing opportunity will be open to women in religious service. May the men not unload the duty, but be nerved to greater faith and consecration by the example of women! "She hath done what she could" was the commendation of Christ. That is the standard for men.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. In time of war should women as well as men be combatants?
2. Should Deborah be described as a heroine to twentieth century young girls in Christian Sunday Schools?
3. Which did more for mankind, Deborah and Joan of Arc, or Florence Nightingale and Frances Willard?
4. What do you think of patriotism which leads women to send white feathers to men in wartime?

Worms are encouraged by morbid conditions of the stomach and bowels, and so subside. Miller's Worm Powders will after these conditions almost immediately and will sweep the worms away. No destructive parasite can live in contact with this medicine, which is not only a worm destroyer, but a health-giving medicine most beneficial to the young constitution, and as such it has no superior.

THE IMPORTANCE OF QUALITY

"As a wearer of glasses you know that there is nothing too good for your eyes."

The making of eye-glass lenses requires a high degree of skill and a vast fund of technical knowledge. We have watched the development of lenses from the commonly called FLAT lenses to the corrected lens of today—lenses which represent the finest materials and workmanship the world can offer. The first is a cheap lens giving clear vision only in the very centre, the second a wide vision lens affording perfect correction both at the edge and centre.

In keeping with the times, the cost of these corrected lenses is considerably less, with the same high quality maintained.
