DEATH WATCH IS PLACED ON NEGRO

Jackson Is Eating His Meals Regularly And Heartily

Apparently unperturbed by the fact that he has for a second time been condemned to hang for the murder of Eugene Lee last October 17, Edward Jackson has resumed the placid routine of existence which he has maintained since he was first confined in his small cell in the County Jail at Peterboro.

As required by law, Sheriff F. J. A. Hall has replaced the death watch of two men alternating on twelve-hour shifts over the condemned Negro. When he was first found guilty and sentenced to death by Justice Sedgwick during February, a death watch was placed over him but it was withdrawn when a new trial was ordered and the prisoner continued his confinement on the same status as the other prisoners in the jail. The men who have now been assigned to the guard will remain on duty until he is hanged on November 22.

Although the sheriff and jail officials are reticent in the matter, it is understood that Jackson's healthy appetite which has already resulted in a gain of forty pounds in weight has not been affected by the passing of what is likely to be his last chance for life. He is eating his meals regularly and heartily. Between now and the time of his execution he will fare consideration better than the other prisoners in the jail as far as his meals are concerned for he will have the choice of almost anything he wishes in his daily menus. The law governing the meals of the ordinary prisoners strictly specifies very plain and inexpensive food in limited quantities.

NO ELECTION THIS AUTUMN

Statement Made By Prime Minister Henry Settles Problem

There will be no Ontario election this year!

From his desk at Queen's Park Premier George S. Henry made the positive statement which sets at rest all rumors of Provincial political combat ere the snow flies.

An election at this juncture, he claims, would retard recovery, which the Premier sees already at work in various commercial avenues, and he says he finds no particular demand for an immediate appeal to the electorate.

This means that Ontario will have a lull in the political storms which have been sweeping the Ontario hustings, precipitated by Ontario Liberal Leader Mitchell F. Hepburn, M. P., and Hon. Harry C. Nixon.

It also means that the 1934 session of the Legislature is sure "election session" and that, with an election unavoidable in the summer or fall months of 1934, the Province is in for a long season of vehement political controversy.

The definite postponement of the Provincial election until 1934 has this additional political consideration—that it may mean a double election for Ontario next year, a Provincial election in mid-summer and a Federal election in the fall, members of Federal Parliament visiting Toronto lately have commented upon the possibility of 1934 being a dual election year.

TOWNSHIP MUST REPAY FARMER

Awarded Rebate Of Overpaid Taxes In Court Decision

Claiming a rebate of taxes paid in error to the Township of Seymour on fifty acres of land, Clement Bayes of Campbellford won a decision of $56 in Division Court at Campbellford when his Honor Judge E. C. S. Haycke of Peterboro, handed down judgment in his favor.

The case, which was tried in Campbellford on Sept. 6, when judgment was reserved has created great public interest. Mr. Bayes had foreclosed a mortgage on the Fraser property for 160 acres of land, but not for fifty acres adjoining, which was not in the mortgage. Through error in not defining the parcel of land at the time of payment, taxes for the full 150 acres were paid, but when a receipt was given Bayes, it was found by him that he had paid more than he should have. He immediately requested a rebate, which was at first promised and later refused by the Seymour Council, the action following. D. J. Lynch represented Bayes, N. A. MacColl appearing for Seymour Township.

PETERBORO MAN GETS SEVEN YEARS

Three Robberies And 18 Forgeries Result In Long Term

On 21 charges, one of attempted robbery while armed, two of burglary and others of forgery, William J. Montgomery, 43, Peterboro, was sentenced there Monday to seven years in Portsmouth Penitentiary. On the three major charges he was given five years on each charge, sentences to run concurrently, and on each of the 18 charges of forgery he was given two years, all to run concurrently, but consecutively to the five-year sentence.

Montgomery was apprehended a month ago when he was knocked unconscious in a scuffle with Clifford Curtiss, service station operator. Montgomery shoved a loaded revolver into Curtiss' face late at night as he left his gas station, but Curtiss refused to "put 'em up" and grappled with the thug, fracturing his skull.

TAXI MEN BEING CHARGED RENTAL

New Regulation Is Put Into Effect At Oshawa C.N.R. Station

A new regulation has been put into effect at the Oshawa station of the Canadian National Railways, whereby all taxi-owners of the city who use the railway property adjoining the station platform as a taxi-stand are required to pay a rental of $1.00 per month for this privilege. This regulation, said the agent of the railway, is nothing new, as it is in effect at most other stations, including Toronto, Belleville and Kingston, but it had not previously been enforced in Oshawa. Regulations have been issued, however, to enforce the regulation and so the taxi-owners are required to pay the rental fee if they wish to use the railway property as a parking stand while waiting for trains.

To transport the big 1050-pound fish required a case ten feet long, four feet deep and four feet wide, with seven hundred pounds of ice.

OSHAWA VETERAN OFFERS TO DIE

J. J. Noble Willing To Sacrifice Life For Californian Nurse

She saved my life twice, and I'm willing to take her place as long as my wife is provided for the rest of her life. I am not able to do much for her anyhow, and it would be better if she could live in comfort," declared John J. Noble, 65-year-old Oshawa veteran of five wars and two armies, who has offered to take the place of a war nurse, awaiting trial in California for the murder of F. J. M. Grace, retired shipping magnate.

J. J. NOBLE

"I don't know why they wouldn't let me. They used to take substitutes in the war, and that was almost certain death," Noble said.

"Oh, John, what a thing to say!" exclaimed his wife, who had known nothing of her husband's offer. "I would certainly never let you go. You can cancel the offer right now."

"Why shouldn't you be willing if you were fixed up for life?" he demanded, turning to his wife. "I haven't anything to give you now, and it will be worse when this allowance stops."

"Don't talk like that," Mrs. Noble declared. "Why, it could never take the money. It would seem as if I had murdered you."

The reporter suggested that though the offer was a gallant gesture it was hardly likely to be accepted by the California authorities. He asked about the occasion in which Frieda Weltz had saved his life.

"I have told you about her," he reminded his wife. "She was the nurse who saved my life when I was crossing from England to France in 1918. Then she looked after me twice after that."

The first rescue occurred while Noble was serving in the American army, which he had joined by cutting ten years from his age in 1918. Crossing from Southampton to La Havre, he stated, the boat in which they were crossing struck a mine a short distance outside of the French port. He was blown into the ocean by the explosion and, unable to swim a stroke, would have sunk if it had not been for the nurse, who was clinging to a piece of wreckage near to him.

"She caught hold of me and kept me up until we were picked up by the small boats," he said.

Second Deliverance

Noble encountered his rescuer twice in the following months in France, he stated. In May, the month after the channel accident, he had a severe attack of pneumonia complicated by injuries from severe burns. He had been in a detachment, he declares, detached to destroy a box car by burning it.

MRS. J. J. NOBLE

The car and contents had been sprayed with gasoline, and in igniting the car both he and the sergeant in charge had been covered with gasoline and their clothes had started to burn.

Water was thrown on them to extinguish the flames had caused a chill which resulted in pneumonia. The nurse who had saved his life attended him in the hospital, and to her care he attributes his recovery. Later in the year she again attended him when he was injured by a shell that exploded in a detachment with which he was marching.

Still suffering at times from the effect of shell shock, the veteran was unable to recall all the details of the various incidents, and admitted that he could not recall what her name had been at that time. He would remember it again, he stated. "She was a small red-headed woman," he declared. He would not further discuss the nurse except to say that she had been a real friend to him.

Not a "Blinking Hero"

"I don't want to be a blinking hero," pointed out Noble. "But I would do as much for anybody who had done that much for me. I would only do it for a person that I liked genuine, mind you. I wouldn't do it for anybody I didn't like."

Though receiving a small "pension

BAKING CONTEST IS BEING PLANNED

Judging Centres Will Be At Port Hope, Colborne And Campbellford

A home-baking contest and a lecture-tour of unusual interest to the women of twenty-seven Ontario counties has just been announced by the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, to discover the best home-bakers of each county and the champions of the entire area.

Every woman who lives in any one of the 27 counties is eligible to enter either bread or cake, or both, in the contest and try for the valuable prizes that are offered.

Local judging is to be done by a travelling Judge who is an expert dietitian and lecturer and who will visit 43 different towns, under the auspices of various women's societies, to deliver public lectures on home-baking and to judge entries to the contest. She will begin her tour on October 31st and complete it about February 16th.

The Counties of Durham and Northumberland are among those listed for this County Baking Championship Contest, and it is likely that the judging centres here will be Colborne, Port Hope and Campbellford.

In every centre eight local prizes will be given. These will include badges, silver bonbon dishes and breadknives; and as soon as all centres in a county have been judged, the county champion for bread and the county champion for cake will each receive a silver cake or sandwich plate.

After the judge has finished her tour, all the prize winners will be eligible to try for the Grand Championships. Prizes for these will consist of a Sterling Silver Tea Set of three pieces and a cheque for fifty dollars for the Grand Champion Bread-maker and for the Grand Champion Cake-maker. Those who stand second in this final contest in the bread and cake sections will receive a Sterling Silver Bowl and cheque for $25.

For local judging, contestants will be required to bring their entries to a judging centre in the county in which they live. Only the leaders in the local contests will be allowed to enter the grand championship contest, which will be judged at Macdonald Institute, Guelph.

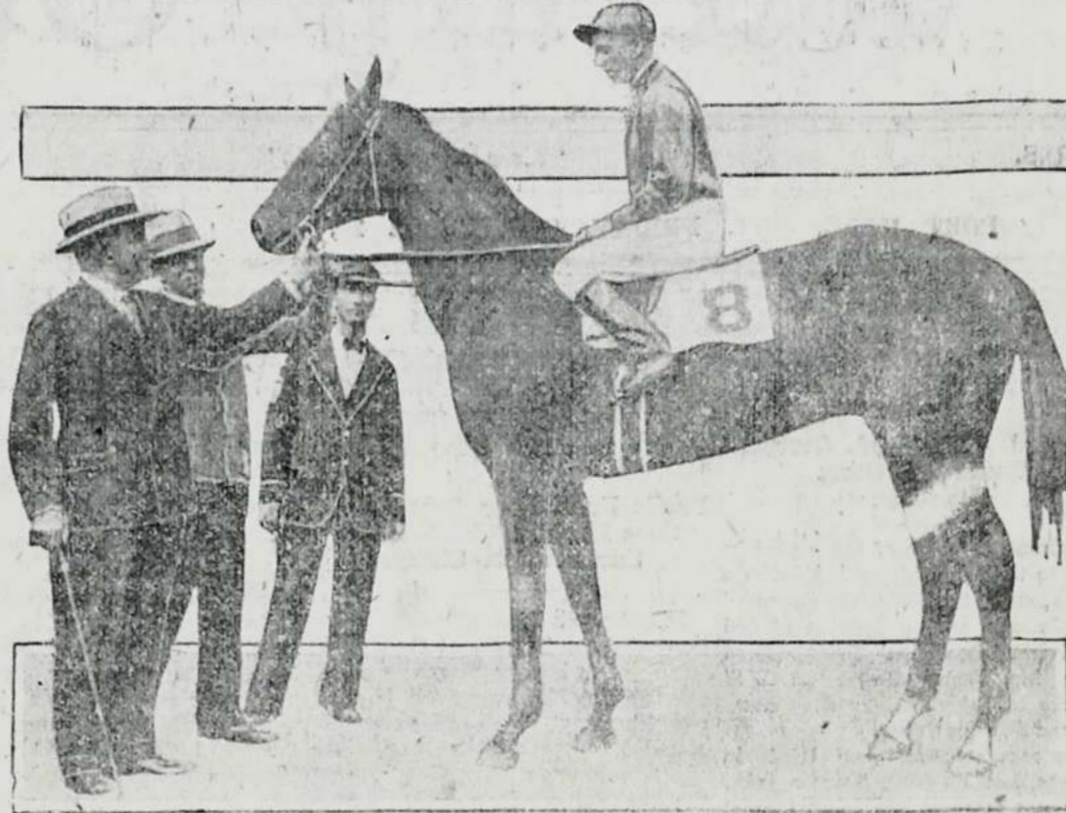

For this final Championship Contest, the Lake of the Woods Company is undertaking to supply the 344 people, who will be eligible to enter, with containers in which to pack their bread or cake for mailing. Every entry for this must be mailed on February 27th. The judging will take place in Guelph on March 1st, and results will be announced as soon after as possible. The only condition attached to the local and championship contests is that all entries must be made with Five Roses Flour.

allowance" from the United States government because of injuries received while serving in the A.E.F., Noble has never received a regular pension. The allowance is granted while his case is under consideration, he stated. He has just been notified that the allowance will cease in the near future.

"Then I will have nothing for my wife to live on," declared Noble. "I might as well do this, then she will have something."

Living in a small two-roomed cottage in what is known as "Shanty Town," in the northwest section of Westmont, the Nobles are on the edge of privation. Noble's health is undermined as a result of his war injuries, and he is also suffering from another ailment. In spite of the privation, the little home is neat and shining with cleanliness and good care.

Real Test for R. S. McLaughlin's Champion

Horometer, the property of R. S. McLaughlin, the Oshawa horseman, will be, barring illness or accident, a sure starter in the Coronation Stakes, to be run Saturday, opening day at Woodbine Park. Trainer Harry Giddings has expressed his opinion that if the son of Hourless-Star Pal emerges from his engagement in the Coronation Stakes, in good shape, he will start the Mc-

Laughlin color-bearer in the Grey Stakes, which will be run on Thursday, September 28. It is usually the victor of the Coronation Stakes that goes into winter quarters as the probable favorite for the King's Plate of the following year. Horometer has only faced the barrier three times in his career but, he has won all his starts, including the Clarendon Plate at Thorncliffe

Park last week, and has scored his victories in such handy fashion that many expert horsemen are of the opinion that Horometer is one of the greatest Canadian-breds ever foaled in Canada. While the distance of the Coronation Stakes is six furlongs for Canadian-breds, the Grey Stakes is an open two-year-old event, with the routine stretched to a mile and seventy yards.

TOOTH DECAY STILL PUZZLES

Even A Clean Tooth Will Decay, Research Proves

So much work has been done in recent years on the causes of dental decay that physicians and dentists are beginning to have a real insight into the subject.

Dental decay is no respecter of persons, it affects the rich and the poor, the young and the old. It may be found in those who are otherwise healthy and those who are sufferers from chronic disease. Between 80 and 95 per cent of children between 10 and 20 years of age have dental cavities.

In a survey of the subject Dr. Martha Koehne has reviewed the most prominent opinions of leading investigators. There is, of course, first of all the idea that good or bad teeth are inherited. However, marriages are not made from health points of view and though heredity may play some part, it is not possible to determine that part exactly.

Clean Tooth Does Decay

For a while the slogan—"A clean tooth never decays"—was believed to express the truth, but, serious students of dental disease have long since discarded this conception. People who keep their mouth scrupulously clean may have cavities, while others with visible dirty mouths have none.

A survey of the subject made by a group of Wisconsin investigators indicated that mouth washes are not dependable protection against dental decay.

For a while it was thought that the chewing of hard food was a valuable measure, but to-day it is believed that such chewing is helpful only to the gum tissue and has little, if anything, to do with the permanence of the teeth.

There are many theories that concern the general chemistry of the body so far as acid or alkaline diets may be involved. Some of these theories place most of the emphasis on vitamins A, C and D, and other theories put most of the emphasis on the calcium and phosphorus in the diet in association with the vitamins.

Vitamins Puzzling

It is difficult to correlate the body chemistry as the basis of dental decay with the fact that certain teeth, for instance the molars, decay more rapidly and more frequently than the incisors. If the matter is one of blood supply and nutrition primarily, why are not all of the teeth equally susceptible?

There are parts of the world where rickets, caused by a deficiency of vitamin D, does not occur and yet many people in these areas suffer with the condition called caries or general dental decay.

There is also, of course, the infectious theory which would place the responsibility on certain germs in the mouth. Unfortunately no one has been able to isolate a germ that will produce dental decay in animals and this theory is considered as yet unfounded.

Finally much blame has attached to the eating of sweets, yet there are vast numbers of people who eat large amounts of sweets without developing dental decay.

The chief practical point in all discussions is the fact that good dental care given early to spots of decay prevents their spread and prevents the growth of the individual cavity.

PLAN LACROSSE LOOP FOR CENTRAL ONTARIO

Plans for a Central Ontario lacrosse league will be discussed at Cobourg at a meeting to be held next Friday, with representatives from Oshawa, Peterboro and other centres in attendance. F. Waghorne, president of the O.A.L.A., will also be present at the meeting.

The suggestion has been made that a league be formed to operate next year with Peterboro, Cobourg and Oshawa as the key points, each centre being the hub of a group of teams. An endeavor would be made to include junior, intermediate and senior lacrosse and while affiliated with the O.A.L.A., the league would have its own officers and function independently.

Fruit should be picked as far as possible in the cool of the day and never whilst wet from rain or dew.

JEWES CELEBRATE THE NEW YEAR

'Rosh Hashonah' Ushered In As Wednesday's Sun Sinks

Beginning with sunset Wednesday, Jewry will celebrate the festival of the Jewish New Year, 5694, known as "Rosh Hashonah". The new year will be ushered in with prayer and meditation, and special prayers will be included in the services for those who lost their lives under the Hitler terrorist rule as well as for the living sufferers.

Originally, the Jewish New Year marked the opening of the agriculture and economic year in Palestine. Coming as it did in autumn, for with the fall season there are followed in regular succession the seasons of the sowing of the seeds, the harvest and gathering of the fruits, it celebrated special sacrifices at the Temple of Jerusalem.

This holiday is distinguished from the observance of others by the blowing of the "Shofar" or ram's horn, an age-old custom which still prevails in all synagogues and symbolizes the calling of all Jews to the fold.

As a matter of fact, point out the learned rabbis, this day was not expressly called New Year's Day in the early ages, but was adopted as such generations ago. As the agricultural background faded away from Jewish life, rabbinic authorities shifted the New Year's Day to memorialize the beginning of creation, and endowed "Rosh Hashonah" with a most solemn meaning. Based upon scriptural passages, it became the Judgment Day of the Jewish calendar, the day God judges all inhabitants of the earth.

Throughout the medieval ages and right through to the present day, the idea of judgment constituted the keynote of the entire service. Practically all prayers of the day carry the messages of Judgment. As a result there grew to be emphasized more and more the idea that the New Year marks the season of self-examination, repentance, and reconciliation with men and God, and to-day this thought is dominant in all prayers and supplications of the services.

Silver trophies will be presented to the winner of the 3-year-old-and-under colt race, and the winner of the 2:09 pace. The balance of the card is for 2:17, 2:24 and 2:28 pacers, and a straight trot for 2:25 trotters. All class races are for $250. Entries for colt stakes close Oct. 1 and class events Oct. 6. TENDER HUMAN STEAKS

Carib Indians (now virtually vanished from their aboriginal habitat, South America and the West Indies) used to have market places for the sale of human steaks and ribs of human "beef," says an authority in Jamaica.

The word Carib means "cannibal." It adds. Hence the islands of the Caribbean are the original "cannibal islands." A few remnants of the Carib race can be seen on several islands visited by Canadian National steamers from Montreal, Halifax and Boston.

FATAL ACCIDENTS HIGHER IN JULY

Toll Is Two Lives Above Month Of 1932—Property Damage Down

"Nations shudder at the thought of war to-day, yet in every city in the world there are people suffering injury and death from a peace time cause and many are prone to regard the result as inevitable and refuse to put forth an active effort to avert these calamities," declared a bulletin issued by the motor vehicle branch of the department of highways. "There have been efforts made to place some curb on the forms future wars may take. Efforts have been made to protect non-combatants, women and children. But among the victims of motor accidents there are thousands of little children, thousands of old men and women, as well as those who might be numbered among the combatant forces in war.

"If the public with a concerted voice demand safety and protection, safety will be achieved. Just so long as the general public continues to smile at stories of excessive speed; to feel that traffic laws are for the other fellow, and that it is all right to break them as long as you don't get caught; for just that period will motor vehicle accidents continue to menace."

During July, motor accidents reported numbered 878 and resulting in 53 deaths, $86,095 property damage, and non-fatal injuries to 873 persons. There were two more persons killed than during July, 1932. Motor accidents of all types decreased 2.3 per cent from the corresponding month of 1932; property damage was $23,547 or 24.3 per cent less and there were 62 fewer persons injured.

While there were 30 less accidents than during last July, there were 27 more mishaps involving pedestrians, 11 more collisions with fixed objects, 24 more collisions with bicycles, and 11 more collisions with motorcycles. Motor accidents in all other classifications were fewer in number.

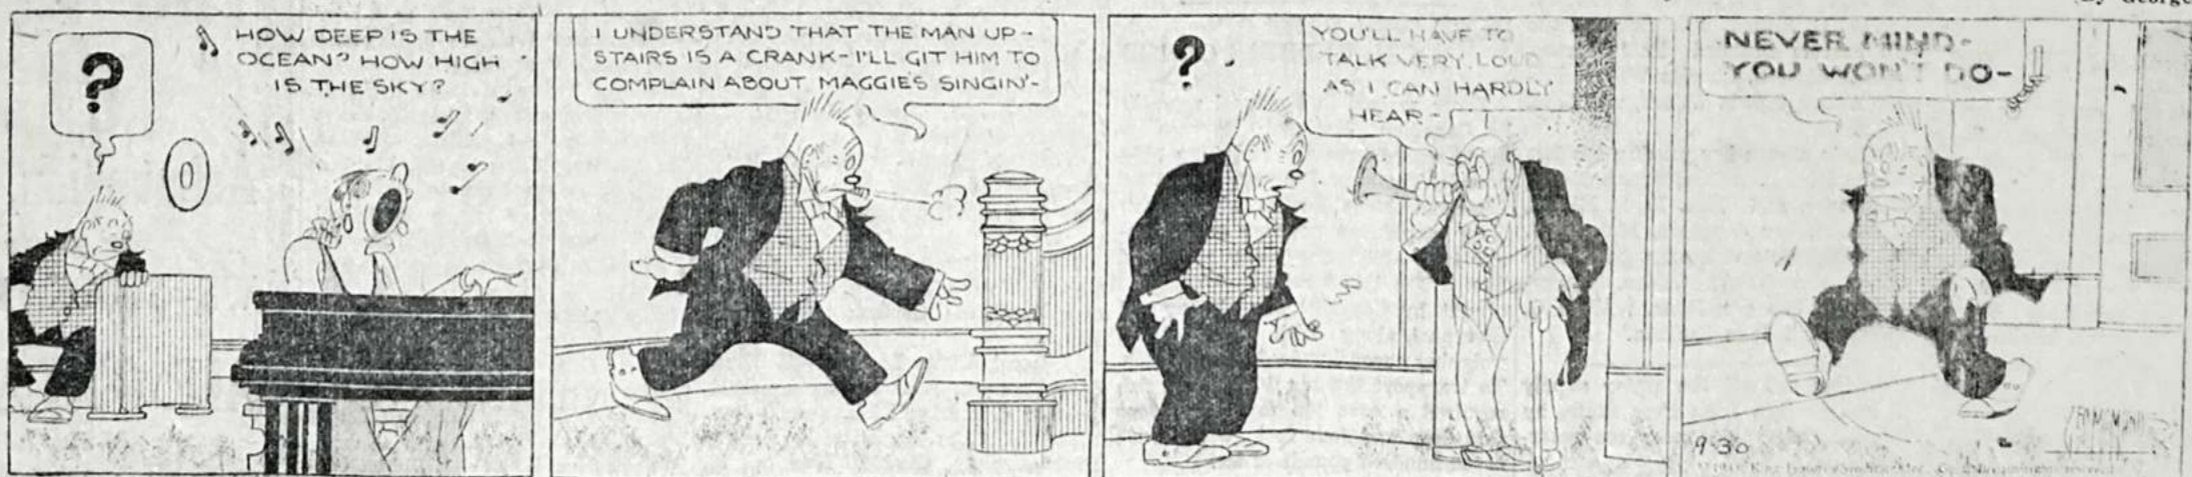

A SUCCESSFUL PARASITE

For the time being at least, the residents of Greater Vancouver have been freed from one of their most objectionable and destructive pests, thanks to the Entomological Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Introduced accidentally from Europe in 1913, this pest, "the lecanium scale" spread rapidly and by 1933 was destroying all manner of ornamental and other trees over an approximate area of 200 miles, extending from Vancouver eastward for twenty miles and for about five miles north and south of that city, although the city of Vancouver had been expending annually nearly $1,000 on control by means of oil sprays. As the result of a request by the Dominion Entomologist to the Imperial Institute, shipments of parasitic flies (chalcid fly) were forwarded from Farnham House laboratory, England; and, under the supervision of the Dominion Forest Pests Suppression Division, created such havoc amongst the pests that last year the Vancouver Parks Board was advised to relinquish its regular spray program. This step was thoroughly justified, as, in the early summer, nowhere were the scales sufficiently numerous to warrant control work being undertaken. Since then, the good work of expiration is proceeding, the scale now being present only in small numbers. Meanwhile, the future of the little fly colonist is being watched with interest.

BRINGING UP FATHER

By George McManus

HEARD ON THE STREET

THURSDAY, SEPT. 21.

Good morning! What's been doing about town?

Port Hope is carrying on very much as usual which saying something when you see how they're getting along in other Ontario towns.

A visitor to Quebec recently, returned to town thinks that generally speaking the people of that province seem to be better off. We understand that unemployment is principally confined to the larger cities and the towns have very few on relief.

Magnificent Motor! Asker—What did you give for that car? Tellit—Took it for debt—chay owed me a thousand dollars!

Asker—Ah! Do you stand any show of getting the other nine hundred? FRIDAY, SEPT. 22.

Have you got your tickets?

The Rotarians are putting up some mighty fine prizes to be drawn just a week from to-night.

Not only are the prizes to be good next Friday but its going to be the best carnival followed by the biggest Barn Dance ever held here.

Get your tickets for the big Rotary night which have a three-fold purpose, give you entrance to the "Barn" (two bits extra to dance), entitle you to a chance to draw and helps in a good work.

For the first time in the history of the Lindsay Central Exhibition, the entries in cattle were so numerous that the large barns set aside for this purpose would not hold all the cattle. As a result a number of the beasts were transported to the farm of W. J. Murphy, and given shelter in his barn overnight.

Isaac Bowins of Norland narrowly escaped from death when, going down in a deep well he suffered a deep cut. After Dr. Millyard of Cobocok worked with him for an hour and a half he brought Bowins to consciousness. Mrs. Bowins and Charles Bowins hoisted the injured man out of the well with a rope before help reached them.

A. C. Hall, Oshawa barrister, is most prominently mentioned as in line for appointment as Crown Attorney for Ontario County to succeed J. A. McGibbon, who has been officially appointed county judge for Victoria and Haliburton. For almost two years Hall has acted for the Inland Revenue Department in prosecuting cases of illegal possession of alcohol. In his early thirties, Hall for the past several years has been secretary of the Liberal-Conservative Association of South Ontario County riding.

Under the auspices of the Ladies Guild of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, a delightful afternoon tea was held Thursday at the Manse, Pine Street.

To-day is the second day of fall and to bring with it equinoctial gales. The equinox does not come this year on Sept. 21, but on Sept. 23 at 12:46 o'clock.

We can hold our hats for a while now as the winds start to cool, turn the leaves and then rustle them about.

Skidding off the highway in making a sharp curve near Cobourg, Margaret Ferguson had a narrow escape from serious injury when her car overturned, pinning her underneath. Motorists attracted by her cries, lifted the car, a coupe, on its wheels and extricated her. Beyond bruises and shock she is uninjured.

Who Can Understand? "Do you play golf?" "No; but I'm hanged if I can give it up."

PHRENOLOGIST WINS

In these modern days tea-cup-reading and mind-reading appear to be a necessity, commented Justice Tweedie, at Calgary. He ordered Police Chief Ritchie to show cause why Miss Bobby Evans of Port Hope, Ont., should not be granted a phrenologist's license.

2,000-CARAT DIAMOND DISCOVERED IN BRAZIL

One of the world's largest diamonds, a stone of 540 grams or more than 2,000 carats, was reported at Rio de Janeiro to have been found in a diamond field in Minas Geraes Province. Its value was placed at $780,000. A prospector is credited with the find, which compares favorably with the Great Cullinan diamond, found in South Africa in 1907, from which two stones were cut for the British sceptre and crown.

FAMOUS CHURCHES WIN PRAISE OF PARISIAN

The sound and historic lines which characterize the more famous ecclesiastical buildings of Canada won the praise of a building contractor from Paris, France, who is visiting Canada with a view to studying carpentry practices in the Dominion, according to the Industrial Department of the Canadian National Railways. He, however stated that he found fewer "modern" buildings than were to be seen in the older countries of Europe.

Bourlier, General Passenger Agent of the Canadian National Railways, announced Saturday a radical innovation in railway tariffs for the hunting season. Steps Under Way To Place Gold Stock On Toronto Exchange

Because there are many veins of gold, with widths up to fifty feet; because the ore runs $12 to $15 a ton, and because shares are quoted at better than $4 on the Vancouver Exchange, are the reasons that officials of Cariboo Gold Quartz, Limited, expect great things of this mine and have made application for listing to the Standard Stock and Mining Exchange, according to D. A. Hamilton, who is in Toronto.

This mine is only three miles from the famous Barkerville, where old-timers of 1860 removed many million dollars of the yellow metal. But, while the old-timers swished a pan and shovelled sand from the streams, the Cariboo mine is in the base of a towering mountain.

Workers on the Cariboo have tunneled into the base of a mountain and struck many veins. The most recent discovery at this mine, was a 50-foot wide vein that so far has been traced 150 feet. A 75-ton pilot mill produces $30,000 in gold each month, and, though this just pays for operations, a larger mill will be installed at the first of the year when financing has been completed.

Cariboo Gold Quartz is the largest trader on the Vancouver Exchange, according to Mr. Hamilton, and he expects it to move along with the rest of the medium-priced goods, if listed on the Standard Exchange.

TWO HELD AT COBOURG ON ROBBERY CHARGES

John Chandler and Francis Cunningham, both of Oshawa, were in Jail at Cobourg last night awaiting trial Sept. 27th on charges of having robbed several stores in Colborne, Marmora and nearby towns. The men were arrested at Oshawa and taken to Cobourg for preliminary Police Court hearing. A large quantity of goods, part of which was said to have been stolen from Colborne stores was recovered, police say.

DEAD MAN BLAMED

"Death by his own negligence" was the verdict returned by a coroner's jury investigating the death of Everett H. PLAYERS HURT IN TRUCK CRASH

Softball Players Figure In Mishap Near Port Perry

When a truck driven by Chris Graham, Oshawa, carrying twenty-two members and supporters of the Northminster softball team, crashed into a ditch about twenty miles north of Oshawa late Tuesday night, Helen Robinson, Queen street, Oshawa, suffered a broken leg and possible internal injuries and is in the Oshawa General Hospital in a serious condition. Practically every occupant of the truck was badly shaken up, at least five other members of the truck being given medical attention.

The Northminster baseball team played a Port Perry team earlier in the evening and were en route back to Oshawa, where they intended to hold a weiner roast. Suddenly the truck got out of control on a steep hill and skidded into a deep ditch, throwing the occupants of the vehicle out on the road with terrific force. An ambulance was rushed from Oshawa. The accident occurred on a lonely stretch of a country road near Lake Scugog.

TED HODGETTS TO LEAD COBOURG COLLEGIATE A.S.

The Cobourg Collegiate Boys' Athletic Society has reorganized for the coming season. The officers for coming year were elected, as follows: Hon. President, R. N. McKenzie; President, Ted Hodgetts; Vice-President, Archie Spooner; Secretary-Treasurer, Laird Wicks; Committees: Equipment, Johnny Bolster; Social, Jim Turpin; Press, Jack Turpin; Score Board, Bill Brown, John Lucas.

Football is at present occupying the attention of the boys, to the exclusion of almost everything else, and prospects for this year's senior squad appear bright. "Chuck" Peck has enrolled, and Archie Spooner is back with a number of experienced players, including Ted Hodgetts, Bob Lucas, Dumble Haydon, Joe Dufton, "Pro" Leitham and George McIntyre. The team will also be strengthened by the following from last year's intermediates: George Lloyd, "Chuck" Johnston, Alex Pratt, Bake Tisford, Jimmie Bolster, Tom Grene, Bill Woods, Leo Flesch and Pattenick. Harry Campbell has also turned out, and Bobby Cooper is back at school.

SHUTTERS FRUSTRATE BURGLARS AT COBOURG

Burglars made an unsuccessful attempt to break into Scougale's men's wear store, at Cobourg, being frustrated by heavy shutters after they had removed an outside window and broken the inside one. Night Constable Gavin Reid, during his rounds at the rear of the business section, noticed that a window was off of the side of the Scougale store, but concluded that the owners had left it there while putting on the outside storm windows for the winter.

Peterboro Normal School Opens For Fall Term

With the opening of the Peterboro Normal School Tuesday approximately 200 future school teachers, enrolled at the school, launched upon their serious studies. Every city and town throughout Eastern Ontario is represented in the large student body.

Despite the fact that many of last year's graduates failed to obtain schools the enrolment is little below that of previous years. Dr. J. A. Bannister principal, stated it has been noticeable in the last few years that a larger number of men are entering the teaching profession. Even at that the number of girl students enrolled at the school outnumber the boys two to one.

One Killed, Five in Hospital Car Hits Truck Near Welcome

George Brown, Lonsdale, Dies Three Hours After Crash on Highway at 2.30 o'clock this morning—Car struck near end of parked truck Inquest will be held

(From Thursday's Daily.)

One man was killed and five motorists were taken to the Port Hope Hospital as a result of an accident on the Provincial Highway about a mile west of Welcome at 2.30 o'clock this morning when a car, proceeding eastward, crashed into the rear end of a truck which was parked on the south side of the highway.

The dead man is George Brown, aged 63 years, of Lonsdale, while the other five motorists also come from the Napanee district. The occupants of the car were Mr. and Mrs. J. Tullock, both suffering facial injuries and Mr. and Mrs. Weese, the latter sustaining injuries to her hip while the former is suffering from shock. Earl Teskey is the most serious injured of the five, sustaining fractures of facial bones. Reports at noon today state that they are resting comfortably at the hospital.

Brown was proceeding in an easterly direction and was returning home from Whitby, where he had attended the graduation exercises of the Ontario Hospital, where his daughter had graduated.

It is stated that the car was proceeding at a moderate speed and apparently the driver failed to notice a transport truck, parked on the south side of the highway, near the weigh scales, west of Welcome. The auto ploughed into the rear end of the truck and was badly damaged.

The driver of the truck, which is owned by Martin's Transport, was Fred Sanders 2375 Gerrard Street East, Toronto. It is stated that his battery went dead and the truck lights went out. He was forced to stop and was investigating the trouble when the impact took place.

Brown died three hours following the crash and his body was removed to the undertaking parlours of A. W. George & Son. The injured people at the hospital were attended by Dr. F. W. Diamond and Dr. W. Tucker.

No charge has yet been laid by the police and Coroner Dr. W. McDermott will hold an inquest. Provincial Constable W. J. Carey, of Cobourg, and Provincial Motorcycle Constable E. Parves, of Bowmanville, investigated.

HEARD ON THE STREET

SATURDAY, SEPT. 23.

Good morning! 'Tis a dark and dismal day!

One happy thought: these unpleasant days in which we find ourselves can't last forever.

If you could see each and every person in Port Hope you'd see a great many who are enjoying themselves in spite of conditions and the weather.

One little boy had a three inch ship which he walked beside in a pool today, happy as the day is long and never worrying about the rheumatism of to-morrow.

Sixty dahlias of various sizes and hues are on exhibition in the display window of F. H. Brown, local grocer and present a striking appearance. The blooms were grown in Mr. Brown's spacious gardens on Hope street and some of the flowers measure over twelve inches in width.

Telegraphic communication from Vancouver, dated Friday reads as follows:—"Cariboo Gold to-day's high $4.10, to-day's close $4.00, trading weak in gold stocks."

Hon. H. A. Stewart, Minister of Public Works was in town yesterday and accompanied by the members of the Port Hope Harbour Commission, conducted a tour of the local harbour.

Daylight Saving Time in Port Hope ends a week from to-night, at twelve o'clock midnight.

Orme Gansby and his "Orono Ramblers" will visit Sunderland on Friday, 29th, to play ball in a double-header with a picked team from that locality.

A new business will be started in Campbellford in the near future, when a branch of the A. & P. chain stores will open up in the Loukes Block, Front street, on October 1. The premises which this new store will take are now occupied by the Habeco Store.

Constable Lewis Denton, R.C.M.P., stationed at Cobourg was among the mounties ordered to quell the disturbances at Long Branch relief camp. He left on Tuesday.

The loyalty of the citizens of Lindsay was attested this week when it was announced that the town's $80,000 bond issue, covering the floating indebtedness of the town, had been sold. The bonds are for 15 years, at 5 per cent., and over $60,000 were sold to Lindsay taxpayers.

The annual plowing match of the South Ontario Plowmen's Association will be held on October 25th, on the farm of W. T. Lambert, one mile east of Brooklyn, Lot 19, Cor. 5.

First Machinist—Was the foreman surprised at your leaving?

TUESDAY, SEPT. 26.

Good morning! Have you had a fair time this fall?

There are still a few people old-fashioned enough to enjoy seeing what the ground hath brought forth and the things that have been wrought by the cunning of man's mind, coupled with the skill of his hands.

Despite changing times and conditions Fall Fairs still draw their crowds. Last week a large number of Port Hope's attended Lindsay Fair. Yesterday afternoon a goodly number gathered at Welcome to see how the children of the district were learning the art of growing the best and making useful as well as decorative articles for about the home.

By the time the Fall Fairs are over we'll start the rounds of the Fowl Suppers and then we're into Christmas shopping.

There was some disappointment when it was discovered that the Canton quartet was unable to be at the U.C. Y.P.S. last night because one of its members hadn't returned from a week-end trip. Gillard Darling and A. E. Duncan Mc

Tavish demonstrated his ability to hold an audience interested in his lecture.

"What did you make of it?" Mr. McTavish's lecture should do more than just provide a pleasant evening for those who heard him but get each and every person thinking of how to make their life count for something worth while.

The annual carnival of the Port Hope Rotary Club will be held at the Armouries, on Friday evening of this week and the usual large crowd is expected to attend the event. There will be an attraction for young and old but of course chief interest centres in the draw for the major prizes.

Fred Harper market gardener on the Port Hope-Peterboro highway has two giant cucumbers having weight of six pounds. One of the cucumbers is 16 1/2 inches in length while the other is 15 1/2 inches. Both have a circumference of 9 1/2 inches around the thickest part.

Members of the Hart House String quartet are to be the guests for the next ten days of Hon. Vincent Massey and Mrs. Massey at Canton.

Figures won't lie. And that is exactly what makes dress-making such a difficult profession.

A piece of roadbed on the new scenic highway from Minden to Dorset, turned completely over and buried hundreds of tons of rock and gravel material with which it had been constructed. The piece of road bed lies across a swampy tract of ground, and required a great deal of material and labor to build. All work was done in vain when one side of the road sank and then buried itself in mire. A temporary road was hastily constructed to accommodate traffic.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Resever of Kenora have been visiting Mrs. W. R. Dodd, Blooms Grove Ave.

Mr. and Mrs. V. Hudson and son William, Elgin Street, are spending a week with friends in Syracuse, N.Y.

Miss Sybil Brown, Port Hope, has returned from Lindsay where she was judging at the Lindsay Exhibition.

Mr. Johnson Douglas, Winnipeg, returned home to-day after a short visit with his sister, Mrs. W. A. MacMillan, Princess Street.

Mrs. Geo. Kearns, of Toronto, who has been spending a very enjoyable visit in Ottawa, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McDonald, is in town for a short visit before returning home.

Dr. Withrow Not Allowed To Speak Over Radio

The Canadian Radio Commission has refused to allow Dr. O. C. J. Withrow to speak over the air in an interview that had been arranged for him.

The reasons given by the Commission for the refusal were that the interview would advertise Dr. Withrow's book, "Shackling the Transgressor," and that because of the controversial nature of "Prison Reform," the subject he would have discussed.

Dr. Withrow did not himself make the request to speak over the air. It was made by his publishers, who had contracted with a commercial broadcasting company.

Sudden Attack Proves Fatal—Appointed to Bench in 1927

Stricken suddenly on Saturday, Mr. Justice William Edgar Raney, a member of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and former Attorney-General in the Drury Administration, died Sunday at his home, 222 Forest Hill Road, Toronto.

Mr. Justice Raney's death followed an illness of several months, which commenced with a heart attack and compelled him later to relinquish the duties associated with his place on the Supreme Court Bench.

Justice Raney was appointed to the Supreme Court on Sept. 16, 1927, while Leader of the Progressive group in the Legislature. Mr. Raney represented Prince Edward, capturing the seat by a small majority from Horace Collier, Conservative, in the 1926 Government Control election.

Born near Aultsville, Stormont County, on Dec. 8, 1859, Mr. Justice Raney was the son of Herman Raney, farmer and lumberman, who was of Huguenot and United Empire Loyalist descent. On the farm adjacent the late Sir James Whitney was born and reared. Mr. Raney's early education was acquired in the log school near his home. At the age of 15 he was a clerk in the village store, and at the age of 18 he was a school teacher in the locality. Later he became a member of the staff of the St. Catharines Collegiate Institute, and then for two years he followed newspaper work as a reporter in the State of Maine and on a Kingston daily.

After graduating from Trinity College, Toronto, and Osgoode Hall as a gold medalist, Mr. Raney commenced the practice of law in Kingston, within a short time moving to Toronto.

While following his profession Mr. Raney was associated with Hon. I. B. Lucas and then for many years with Hartley Dewart. He was granted his K.C. in 1906.

After a few well chosen words from the retiring president, Dr. Palmer was unanimously voted Honorary President of the Society, as a token of the esteem in which he is held by the young people of the church. All other officers were keenly contested with the exception of the presidency, Murray Gibson being unanimously elected for a second term.

Other officers elected were as follows:

Vice-President—Audrey Box.

Secretary—Aileen Gifford.

Treasurer—Cyril Hewson.

Executive Committee—A. H. N. Snelgrove, Enid Palmer, Betty Chislett, Wallace Gifford.

Benjamin F. Ackerman, President of the B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, large harness, boot and shoe makers, died at Peterboro Wednesday. He was a native of Prince Edward County, of United Empire Loyalist parentage, but started a harness establishment in Norwood at the age of 20, and in 1892 transferred the business to Peterboro. During the war years his firm filled large orders for the Canadian and British forces, while to accommodate the trade in Western Canada a large factory and warehouse was built in Regina soon after the war.

Mr. Ackerman was also active in church and civil affairs. He was a member of the Nicholls Hospital Board for twelve years, and also served on the Board of Education. He was Honorary President of the Children's Aid Society and Past President of the Little Lake Cemetery Board.

In 1875 he married Charlotte Frances Lumsden, who survives him, along with two sons, Lieut.-Col. Charles Ackerman, Past President of the Ontario Command of the Canadian Legion, and William O. Ackerman; as well as two daughters, all of whom live at Peterboro. A third son, Lieutenant A. R. Ackerman, was killed overseas. He and his brother were the first to enlist in Peterboro when war broke out.

INCREASE IN ELECTRICITY

Gain Of 11.5 Per Cent. In August Despite Lowered Export

An increase of 11.5 per cent. in electrical energy produced in Canada in August as compared with July was shown in returns collected by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. On the other hand, the export figures were lower indicating a greater use of electricity in Canada.

"A dependable test of the internal economic situation in Canada is the production of electricity," said Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce. "It enters so largely into our everyday home life and the workshops of the nation that in itself it is an index of what is doing. It is an index we all comprehend."

"August was the fourth successive month in which the day output has increased over the output of the previous month, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and a larger proportion of the August production was consumed in Canada than in July, the export to the United States declining from 119,192,000 kilowatt hours in July to 112,322,000 in August."

NEW STATION AT MONTREAL

Better Facilities For Commission Programs Sent From Montreal

It was announced by Hector Charlesworth, chairman, that arrangements have been completed by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission for establishment in Montreal of a 5-kilowatt station which will be used entirely with commission programs.

This station, he said, will be of the most modern type and will be located near the village of Laprarie at a spot where suitable power and telephone lines are available.

"Complaints have been received by the commission in the past due to the fact that coverage in the province of Quebec for commission programs has not been satisfactory," said Mr. Charlesworth. "The commission is confident that with the completion of this station, coverage in that province and in Eastern Ontario will be entirely satisfactory."

It is expected that this station will be on the air by Nov. 1, he concluded.

ONE KILLED, FIVE HURT, IN HIGHWAY CRASH

Earl Teskey is the most seriously injured of the survivors, suffering severe head lacerations. Provided complications do not set in he is expected to recover. McDerment empaneled a jury here Thursday afternoon and after viewing the body an adjournment was made until October 2.

GRAND JURIES ARE UPHOLD

Mr. Justice Armour 'Hopes Day Will Never Come When They Will Be Abolished'

Grand juries and the importance of retaining them in Ontario legal jurisdiction found a strong champion at Peterboro in Mr. Justice Armour, who declared: "I hope the day will never come when grand juries will be abolished."

It was in his address to the Grand Jury at the opening of the Assizes of the Supreme Court that Mr. Justice Armour expressed strongly his opinion of the importance of grand juries. "Some persons are agitating the abolition of grand juries and some others see clearly the benefits of the present system," he stated. "There is a keen difference of opinion. Some favor the total abolition of grand juries, while others are only willing to go halfway, having them merely at the half-yearly assizes."

"I am strongly in favor of the maintenance of this ancient institution, because of its benefits in the administration of justice. It permits the people to have a real word to say in the administration of justice. There are some criticisms of findings of grand juries, but they are chosen by lot and by a complicated system which prevents the miscarriage of justice to any great extent."

"As long as justice continues to be administered by juries then so long should grand juries be maintained."

PRESBYTERY IN FAVOUR OF PROBE

Cobourg Presbytery Passes Resolution Re Penal Institutions And Liquor

The Cobourg Presbytery of the United Church, meeting Friday at Frankford, passed two resolutions, one calling for an investigation of the penal institutions in Canada, and the other protesting to Premier Henry, against relaxation of the Liquor Control laws to permit sale of beer and wine in hotels and restaurants.

Asserting the need for reform in dealing with crime and criminals, a second resolution called for the Dominion Government to implement recommendations of a Royal Commission of 1914, and of the Committee of Investigation of 1921, was passed. It also asks that the Government appoint a Royal Commission of unbiased competent persons to investigate all penal institutions in Canada and the administration of criminal law.

CAMPBELLFORD MAN BAGS FOUR BEARS

Frank Labrash Rounds Up Mother Bear And Three Cubs

Not many hunters can boast of four bears in one afternoon, but Frank Labrash, well-known boat builder at Campbellford, accomplished this feat about 4 o'clock Thursday. Here's the story. Gordon Fox was breaking in a new hunting dog, which he took out to the woods known as "Heddy bush," on the northern outskirts of the town. The dog spotted a cub, which took refuge up a tree; two more cubs appeared, which followed suit; then the big black mother bear came leisurely along. About this time Fox thought he had better make for home and get his rifle. The news spread quickly. Labrash grabbed his repeater, made for the spot indicated by a group of excited boys, and rounded up the entire bear family. Mr. Fox has decided to carry his own gun on his next expedition to the woods.

RESCUED FROM WATER AFTER GOING UNDER

"Here is your handbag, Madam," said a dapper steward of the Canadian National Steamships "Lady Somers," to a charming passenger, ten minutes after she had accidentally dropped the bag overboard as the ship approached dock recently from Jamaica. The passenger, a Montrealer, was resignedly trying to make an inventory of her losses and acknowledge the condolences of fellow passengers. Quick work recovered the handbag. Officer Heenan, of the ship's staff, noticed the bag as it dropped to the water. It flashed off in the river current. In a trice he communicated with a nearby tugboat and in a few minutes the tugboat had chased the purse, overtaken it and "rescued" it, just as it appeared to be "going under for the third time."

COBOURG CASE IS ADJOURNED

Bicycle Borrowed Or Stolen But It Certainly Bought Beer

Wine, beer and a bicycle were hopelessly intermingled in a charge of theft against Michael O'Brien, before Magistrate J. H. Davidson in Cobourg Court.

O'Brien was charged with stealing a bicycle from George Martin, E. A. Hircok, bicycle dealer related that O'Brien had brought the bicycle to him, receiving $5.00 for it, with the understanding that if he did not call back within two weeks, it was to be sold. O'Brien did not turn up.

Martin stated that the bicycle was his and that he had loaned it to O'Brien and had never seen it again. The defendant's version was quite the opposite. Martin and he, testified O'Brien, had developed a thirst on July 5. Money was scarce and Martin told him to "hook" his wheel at the bicycle shop, not wishing to transact the deal himself because of the fact that he owed the dealer a bill.

The bicycle was pawned and the proceeds went to the Liquor Control Board.

"When Martin sobered up the next day, he denied telling me to hook the wheel," declared O'Brien.

Defendant and complainant relapsed into hot denial of each other's statements.

The cadi wearily remarked that there was a darky secreted in the pines somewhere and adjourned the case to get some definite evidence.

"DON'T WORRY"

Hosts of friends, but more especially those of the lawn bowling fraternity, will mourn the passing of Mr. Howard Williams, who died in Toronto in his ninety-third year. During a long and active life Mr. Williams had played many parts. He fought for the North during the Civil War in the United States, and only a few years ago he attended the encampment in Denver, Col., of the Grand Army of the Republic as the sole representative of Toronto. Later he enjoyed the thrill of buffalo hunting in the American West; and after coming to Toronto became well known as a pioneer in the roofing business.

But it was in lawn bowling that Mr. Williams found his greatest enjoyment. Of late years he had been in the habit of sending a message to The Globe from Florida on the occasion of his birthday, which he invariably spent on the bowling green. Many trophies won in competitions in Toronto and at St. Petersburg, Fla., attested his skill in this pastime.

Mr. Williams' philosophy of life, as expressed in his messages to The Globe, might be epitomized in two words: "Don't worry." And no doubt this accounted largely for his length of years and the good health he enjoyed until a week ago. In the death of Mr. Williams a valued citizen and a delightful companion has passed from the scene of his many activities.—Toronto Globe.

PIONEERS IN WANT

The rigors of pioneer life are apparently as severe to-day as they were in the early days of this country, when people, anxious for a new start in life determine upon homesteading in the new and unbroken districts of Canada. During the past year many families from Older Ontario have taken up land in the far north, and just now stories are coming back of unusual hardships, particularly those related by Mayor Croll of Windsor.

It is quite evident that things are not as rosy in the north as the new settlers hoped they would be. There is privation and even distress. This is unfortunate, and it is hoped that some means will be found for relieving this condition.

As usual in all such circumstances, there is a disposition on the part of many to blame the Government, which was a partner to sending these people to the north. It is an easy thing to criticize the authorities and to blame them for all the ills of mankind. This appears to be the system followed in this country, and men who enter public life are usually prepared for all the abuse which seems to be their greatest reward.

But we believe in this instance that the Government is not deserving of all the censure being bestowed upon it. They offered the opportunity to these new settlers to take up land if they so desired. The conditions were made very plain and were even impressed upon the minds of those who accepted the offer. Some people went from this municipality, and the civic authorities did not paint the picture of their future life in rosy hues, by any means. In fact, in some quarters discouragement was placed upon the proposal; so that those who went willingly, accepted the chance, knowing that they were embarking upon an uncertain future, in which courage and indomitability will be necessary in order to enable them to succeed.

It has always seemed to us a remarkable thing that people would choose to go into the wilds to carve out a home in the woods, and endure the privations that such a course entails, when there is plenty of land right here in Kent County—the garden spot of Canada—available for all those who wish to pursue farming activities.

However, we suppose if this spirit of pioneer life did not prevail there would be little chance of Canada expanding to the limit of her possibilities as an agricultural nation; and while farming looks more attractive in Kent where there is an opportunity to enjoy some of the modern conveniences of life, these people who pack up and depart for the unknown wilds after all deserve a liberal share of credit and praise. They are, in reality, blazing the trail to a greater and broader national prosperity.

It is therefore, unfortunate to learn that some of them are in want and unable to subsist upon the allowances provided for them in the early stages of their farming careers. It is hoped that some way will be found to render assistance to these people. While the Government's proposition was presented above board with no deception involved; these new settlers after all are there now trying to make the best of a bad bargain, and it would be perfectly justifiable if the government would conduct a thorough investigation into their condition, and if necessary amend their proposition to these people by making provision for at least the necessities of life in order that the whole scheme of settlement may succeed.—Chatham Daily News.

LETTERS TO NEWSPAPERS

A newspaper has a difficult task in catering to the views of many different shades of thought. Its endeavor always is to keep on an even keel and to give the greatest volume of space to those subjects in which it has found by experience the largest proportion of its public is interested. In following this course it often gives offence; not willingly, but simply because judgment affecting matters of interest continues to vary according to the likes and dislikes of the individual. The correspondent columns of any newspaper are a reflection of public opinion. They can, however, if not properly governed, become a happy hunting ground for cranks and for the perpetration of personalities and intolerance in viewpoint. That is often the reason why controversies are not allowed to become prolonged. Contrary to a general view entertained by the public one of the main problems in connection with a newspaper is what to leave out, not what to print.—Victoria Colonist.

LIEUT.-GOV. AT CARTWRIGHT FAIR

Dr. Herbert Bruce Recalls Boyhood Days In Opening Fair

Wednesday was a gala day for the little village of Blackstock, for not only was it the 68th anniversary of Cartwright Township Agricultural Society Fall Fair, but Lieutenant-Governor Herbert Bruce, a native of the district, was there to open the fair. It was a great reception accorded to Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Bruce, for it was the first time since his appointment to office that he had visited the district. Old school mates and former friends rallied around in scores to shake the hand of the Governor.

Col. Bruce and Mrs. Bruce, motored to Cartwright township, where, first of all, the old Bruce homestead, three miles north of the village, was visited. Although the old home is sadly dilapidated, Dr. Bruce spent over an hour, slowly and carefully taking in the scenes of his boyhood days.

On the returning to Blackstock President Forder of the Cartwright Agricultural Society; Fred Bowen, M.P.; Mrs. Bowen, officers and directors of the society, their wives and old friends accorded the distinguished visitors a hearty welcome. The whole party of sixty or more sat down to an old-fashioned chicken dinner.

Recalls Old Day

Dr. Bruce and his wife then joined in the party of officers and directors, and marched to the fairground behind the Port Perry band. Chatting gayly on the way to the fair ground, Col. Bruce recalled that many a time as a young boy he had followed the parade to the fair.

A cheering crowd welcomed the procession at the grounds. Mr. Bowen introduced the Lieutenant-Governor and his wife.

"As the son of a farmer and one who is greatly interested in agriculture, I think I am particularly well able to open an agricultural fair," Dr. Bruce said. "Since 1830, when Lieutenant-Governor Slavoce first took an interest in an agricultural fair, the Government has been helping to support agricultural shows and assisting the farmers. I think all have benefited from these shows."

The early history of Cartwright Township was recalled by Dr. Bruce, who mentioned John Marlowe as the first settler in 1827. The first settler in Blackstock, he said, was Geo. Hall in 1834 while the village of Caesarea was founded by William Caesar who came there in 1836. His own father, Dr. Bruce said, had been brought to the district when six months old, in 1837. His grandfather was Robert Bruce and his father, Stewart Bruce.

Fiercy Orangemen

Blackstock at one time had been a somewhat notorious village, Dr. Bruce claimed, recalling that it had two hotels and three saloons while the "Cartwright blazers", a fiery band of Orangemen, lived up to their name.

Old friends and acquaintances crowded around Dr. and Mrs. Bruce after the fair had been officially declared open. Warm handshakes were exchanged and old times recalled. Before leaving the grounds Dr. Bruce examined the exhibits, pausing for many minutes at a time to admire beautiful horses. Mrs. Bruce, accompanied by Mrs. Bowen spent some time admiring exhibits of fancy work, home-made cooking and art in the women's building.

FARMERS LEAP TO SAFETY WHEN SILO TOPPLES OVER

Silos have been known to topple over when empty, but it is a rare thing to have a silo fall over when it is full. On the farm of Kenneth Babcock, at Wilton, near Kingston, 60 tons of ensilage had been put in the silo when some of the men noticed that the foundation seemed to be sinking. The matter was not considered serious, and the filling proceeded until about eight feet from the top, when suddenly the entire silo toppled over, crushing the pipes. All the men were able to jump aside and no one was hurt.

CROP REPORT

Below will be found a brief synopsis of telegraphic reports received at the Head Office of the Bank of Montreal from its Branches. The Branch Managers have complete and intimate knowledge of each local situation and are in close touch with crop conditions in all sections of the districts mentioned.

GENERAL

Harvesting operations in the Prairie Provinces have been delayed by rains, which may lower the grades of the grain. Approximately 85% of the wheat crop has been threshed in Manitoba and 55% in Saskatchewan, but Alberta is backward only a small percentage of the crop having been threshed. While the rains have improved pasturage and the reserve moisture conditions of the soil, continued dry weather is necessary to complete the harvesting operations. In Quebec oats are yielding fairly well, but other grains are below average. In Ontario threshing has been practically completed and while yields of spring grains are below average, the quality generally is good. There are good crops of apples and grapes. Roots are below average. The tobacco crop is below that of last year. In the Maritime Provinces cereal crops are expected to be about average. The apple crop is well above average. In British Columbia rain has been so general that it has been impossible to complete haying or the threshing of grain. Fruit crops generally are of good quality.

PRAIRIE PROVINCES

ALBERTA NORTHEASTERN AREA—Very little threshing has been completed, the average wheat yield is estimated at from 10 to 12 bushels of high grade. ALBERTA SOUTHEASTERN AREA—Threshing is well advanced, yields are light. Wheat is grading 1 to 3 Northern. ALBERTA WESTERN AREA—Threshing has barely commenced in the northern section, where the average wheat yield is estimated at 20 bushels. In the southern section, about 20% of the crop has been threshed. Wheat is yielding 8 to 10 bushels. The grain marketed is of high grade. Sugar beets are a good crop. SASKATCHEWAN NORTHERN AREA—Wheat yields vary from 3 bushels an acre in western districts to 25 and 30 bushels in East Central sections. Some course grains are still uncut. SASKATCHEWAN SOUTHERN AREA—Harvesting is well advanced. A small acreage of wheat is awaiting favourable weather to combine. Yields generally are disappointing. Course grains range from poor to a total failure. MANITOBA—Only a small portion of the crop remains to be threshed except in the north where operations are more backward. Estimated average yields are—wheat 13 bushels, oats 19 bushels, barley 14 bushels. Grades to date have been high. Rains have improved the feed situation.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Weather conditions have been favorable for harvesting. Potato digging has commenced and the yield is expected to be about average. Apples are plentiful but have not sized well. Grass pastures in some districts are badly in need of more moisture.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Cutting of an average corn crop is well under way. Frequent rains in most sections have helped root crops, pastures and fall wheat seeding. Root crops are below average, with a light yield of potatoes and turnips are very poor. A good average apple crop of well-coloured clean fruit is now being picked. Harvesting of a good grape crop is progressing satisfactorily. The tobacco crop is nearly all housed, but yield and quality are below that of last year. Damage from frosts early last week in Norfolk County is estimated at 1,000,000 pounds. Fall ploughing is generally well advanced, the soil having greatly benefited by recent rains and indications are that an increase in acreage will be sown to winter wheat.

MARITIME PROVINCES

Harvesting is progressing under favourable weather conditions. In yield and quality potatoes are expected to be a good crop, although the acreage was less than last year. Other root crops have benefited by recent rains and a good yield is expected. In quantity and quality the apple crop is well above average. Pastures are satisfactory.

PROVINCE BRITISH COLUMBIA

Tomatoes are very late and if frost does not intervene a yield well above average is expected. Harvesting of root crops is in progress with above-average yields of good quality in prospect. Fruit trees continue in good condition, with estimated yields now as follows—apples 85% of average, pears 90%, peaches 85%, plums and prunes 80%. Pasturage has benefited from recent rains.

RECORD AT LINDSAY FAIR

All Live Stock Departments Overcrowded — Ladies Work Featured

On the occasion of his first visit to Lindsay and district Friday, Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture for Canada, officially opened the fiftieth Central Exhibition there. The Minister addressed a joint meeting of the Kiwanis Club and the directors of the fair. Other guests included R. C. Matthews M.P. of Toronto, W. H. Toman, M.P., and Mayor Tier of Belleville. Rolly Dene, President of the Peterboro Fair; George Stokes, Assistant Superintendent of the C.N.R.; H. J. Humphrey, Vice-President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and many others. The guest speaker was introduced by Kiwanian T. H. Stinson, K.C., M.P., and the address of Hon. Mr. Weir was looked upon as a masterpiece from an agricultural and statesmanlike point of view.

Entries this year at the Lindsay Central Exhibition are larger than in 1932. All departments of live stock are overcrowded. So much so that after the sheep were judged, one large exhibitor had to leave rather than have his sheep out of a stable.

The ladies department and also dairy produce department were crowded to capacity with exhibits. There was a large showing of ladies' quilts, some 160 in number, also lounge cushions, fancy work, etc. There were over forty entries in dairy produce and over thirty-five in eggs.

TRENTON MAIL MAN ROBBED

Forced To Hand Over Registered Mail At Point Of Gun

At the point of a gun Harold Clarke, Trenton mail-carrier, was held up on the deserted Wooler highway, north of Trenton, at 4 o'clock Friday morning and forced to hand the Montreal to Trenton registered mail to an unidentified robber, who, snatching up the loot, escaped across the fields. The value of the stolen mail has not yet been learned.

Every morning about four o'clock Clarke meets the Montreal to Trenton C.N.R. train No. 19 at Trenton Junction, two miles north of Trenton. Friday morning he got the mail as usual and drove away.

About 500 yards from the station he was hailed by a man who asked him for a ride. When Clarke stopped the man attempted to climb into the back of the truck, but Clarke objected and invited him to sit beside him. The man agreed and Clarke drove on.

Half a mile farther on, the man produced a gun and ordered Clarke to drive up the side road.

Climbing into the rear of the truck the man started to rip open all the bags with a knife. In the Hillier and the Wellington bags, he found nothing, but the third bag he opened was the Montreal-to-Trenton bag containing registered mail numbered 441, 6,258, 10,534, 10,589 and 459.

Gathering up his booty, the man jumped from the truck and ran across the fields to where he had a car waiting. Clarke said. Immediately Clarke drove back to the station and notified the police by telephone. Within five minutes, police were on the scene, but despite an all-night search of the country-side they failed to find any trace of the robber.

$6,000 Loss Is Suffered

Barn Burns Near Oshawa

One of the finest barns in the district, on the farm of Frank W. Westry, third concession of Pickering Township was completely destroyed by fire early Tuesday along with a valuable team of horses, farm equipment and the season's crops of grain and hay. Damage, partly covered by insurance was estimated at $6,000. The fire, of unknown origin, was discovered by the hired man, aroused by the crackling of flames. Neighbors who flocked to the scene were able after a stern battle to save the farm house.

JOBLESS MAN ASSAULTS REEVE

Lakefield Resident Must Spend Three Months In Jail For Act

James Derocher unemployed resident of Lakefield, was sentenced Tuesday by Magistrate Langley at Peterboro to three months in jail on conviction of an assault upon C. S. Tanner, Reeve of Lakefield, and former Warden of the county, following a court case.

The assault took place as the Reeve was leaving the Lakefield Town Hall. It was alleged that without any warning Derocher struck the Lakefield Reeve several times. Mr. Tanner was felled but grappled with the assailant who was arrested by Chief Webster. The Reeve had been attending a Division Court case in which Derocher's brother was plaintiff but which was won by the defendant Tanner.

The Guide Story

As the evening closes in he takes a taxi westward, feeling that he has been totally defeated. He is angry with himself angry with the police, who seem to take so little interest in his search and angry, above all, with the invisible James Hogg, in whose claim he put not the slightest faith.

Of course, the wretched man is not Judy's father. Tom is fully convinced of that fact. The idea is ludicrous and outrageous, yet how are they to prove that the man is an impostor? Tom lays his head back against the lining of the taxi and thinks hard, until suddenly an idea occurs to him—an inspiration—and hastily, hopefully, and eagerly, he shouts to the driver—
"Scotland Yard!"

The next day seems slow in passing although Tom spends the greater part of it with Miss Griffin and Judy. To a certain extent, he succeeded in reassuring them, but still they seem anything but confident. Mr. Callaghan calls twice during the day, and each time receives the same answer, "The ladies are out."

The fateful Saturday morning, at last, arrives. Judy and Miss Griffin are both seated in the drawing-room—the former full of suppressed excitement and very pale, the latter a flutter of anxiety and trepidation. What if, after all, Tom's plan should fail? What if that terrible old man should carry off her child?—for Judy is her one light and joy in life.

"Now you understand, don't you, Miss Griffin," explains Tom, for the twentieth time—"when you want me just stamp twice on the floor? I shall be listening underneath and will come instantly."

"Yes yes, Tom. Oh, how I wish I didn't tremble so much! If I once get safely over this day, I will never ask to come up to London again—will you Judy?"

Judy shakes her head and tries hard to smile.
"There's the bell ringing!" exclaims Tom, pressing Miss Griffin's hand reassuringly. "Remember, we are in the dining-room underneath. You have nothing to fear"—and he hurries from the room.

"Oh, Judy, Judy, I believe I shall either faint or scream," says Miss Griffin in a quavering voice. "I am not used to all this excitement, and it gives me a feeling I don't like."
"Be brave, auntie dear," whispers Judy. "I think it will all come right."

Miss Griffin almost shrieks when the door hands turn, but heaves a sigh of relief as Bird announces gravely—
"The Hon. Mr. Callaghan."

"I thought I might possibly be of service to you in the painful interview," he says, shaking hands with Miss Griffin and then turning to Judy. But the latter only bows to him ignoring his proffered hand.
"You are very kind, I am sure, Mr. Callaghan—very kind, indeed," returns Miss Griffin. "How we should have managed during our visit without your help I can't think."

"Don't mention it, pray. You know my motive," says Mr. Callaghan, with a side-glance at Judy "I have come even now, at the eleventh hour, hoping that, when Miss Judy finds there is nothing else to be done, she may prefer my society to that of her unhappy father."

Judy regards him coldly with a scornful smile, but makes no answer. Then shuffling footsteps are heard on the stair case a weight seems to tumble against the door, which is shortly afterwards opened and Bird, in tones of deep disgust announces—
"Mr. Hogg."

"Yes, my dears, here I am," cries the old man, whose hat is set rakishly on one side, while his dirty red pocket-handkerchief hangs limply from one hand. "Come to see you, as I promised. Where's my Polly? Pretty Polly must give her poor old dad a kiss." He lurches forward, coming into contact with a chair, on which, after inspecting it gravely, he seats himself remarking reproachfully, "Don't like chairs. They move about so. Sit tight here, and keep this one quiet. Now, Polly, my pretty, put on yer hat. I want you to fill my pipe and mix my drop of whiskey."

"It strikes me, my man, that you have had a drop more than you ought already," remarks Mr. Callaghan, addressing himself sternly to the newcomer. "How dare you present your self before these ladies in your present condition?"

"Polly, my dear, and the old girl, don't mind. She knows I love my Polly, and I only had a drop or two just to drink her health."

"Oh take him away Mr. Callaghan—please take him away!" falters Miss Griffin faintly.

"Yes, take me 'way," echoes Mr. Hogg mournfully—"take me 'way, Polly, back to Mizzy Court. Your old lady there isn't hospitable—never offered me so much as a thimbleful. Got plenty of whiskey at home. Take me there, Polly, quick!"

"What shall we do? I wanted to reason with him and he has no reason left in him," murmurs Miss Griffin, sighing deeply.

Judy who has been watching the scene closely and silently, stamps twice upon the floor and almost at the same moment Tom enters the room. James Hogg looks up with wonderful sharpness, considering his condition, while Mr. Callaghan scowls suspiciously at the young fellow from under his level brows.

"A friend of ours from the country," explains Miss Griffin, briefly introducing Tom to the Hon. Alexander. Then she continues in an undertone. "That man is intoxicated—what are we to do?"

Tom, instead of replying, places a chair for himself just opposite to the one on which Mr. Hogg is seated, and sitting down fixes his honest gray eyes upon the cringing old man who fidgets about most uncomfortably under this unexpected scrutiny.

After regarding him thus for about a minute Tom says sternly—
"Take your hat off."

"Shan't, then," responds Mr. Hogg defiantly.

"In that case I'll do it for you," observes Tom coolly. And at the same instant the rusty black hat rolls down to the floor and away under the large round table in one corner of the room.

James Hogg leers at it cunningly, and then leans at Tom.

"I'll have you up for 'sault,'" he says huskily.

"And now to business," proceeds Tom, still watching the old man keenly. "I understand that you lay claim to Miss Judy there as your daughter. Now where are your proofs?"

"Mr. Callaghan who has grown very pale steps forward.

"You must see yourself that the man is not in a fit state to argue with you," he says contemptuously. "Unfortunately, there can exist no doubt whatever as to the truth of his statement. Even Miss Griffin, here, though much against her will, is convinced—are you not?"

Miss Griffin only hides her face in her handkerchief and nods a miserable assent.

"Now, look here," pursues Tom, totally ignoring Mr. Callaghan and addressing himself to James Hogg—"we must have solid proof, you know. When you left your child at Miss Griffin's door what had she on—how was she dressed?"

The old man's bloodshot eyes seek the ceiling as if for inspiration.
"She—she'd got on baby-clothes," he stammers at last, and then wipes his brow with his snuffy handkerchief.

"What colour was her frock?" asks Tom sternly.

"Tah can't rightly remember."

"Would you remember if you saw it?"

"Yes—yesh—of course."

Then, much to everybody's astonishment, Tom suddenly, holds up a little bright blue frock.

"Is that it?" he asks.

"Yesh—yesh!" declares the old man seizing the short skirt. "Oh, Polly, Polly, how pretty you looked in it! It broke our hearts to leave you."

"And had your little girl a large mole, just here?" ask Tom, putting his finger just at the back of his own coat-collar.

"She had—she had!" declares James Hogg excitedly.

"Pshaw you old dot!" cries Mr. Callaghan, suddenly seizing the old man by the collar and shaking him as if he were a rat. "Don't you see it is all a plant to disprove your claim?"

During this slight disturbance Tom has quietly risen and rung the bell.

"I agree with you, Mr. Callaghan, that it looks uncommonly like a plant," says the young fellow, with a laugh. "Miss Earnshaw has no mole on her neck and when found she was dressed in the most dainty clothing of spotless white. Tramps, as a rule, do not trim their children's dresses with real lace. The little blue frock, which seems to have brought such touching remembrances to Mr. Hogg I bought in Queen's Road as I come home from the morning."

"I am afraid such tricks won't hold good in a Court of Law," sneers Mr. Callaghan. "Mr. Hogg came this morning to fetch his daughter, and he is scarcely likely to leave again without her, just because he can't remember what dress she wore eighteen or twenty years since. If necessary, of course, he will call in the police—but I think myself, that Miss Judy had better go quietly."

"If she goes, she goes with my arms round her neck," cries Miss Griffin, throwing her arms round Judy to demonstrate her meaning. "They shall never separate us after all these years—never—never!"—and the poor lady sobs hysterically.

Tom addresses himself once more to James Hogg.
"I have found you out to be an impostor. But before you leave this room you own it. Now, is that lady your daughter, or is she not?" he demands, pointing at Judy.

"She ish!" persists James Hogg doggedly.

"You swear to it?"

"Yesh—I swear to it—that girl there ish my long-lost Polly."

"Then let your stubbornness fall upon your own head," says Tom impatiently. And, as he speaks, he opens the door, admitting a detective.

"Attempting to extort money by false pretences," explains Tom by way of introduction and pointing at James Hogg, who is edging away stealthily towards the second door in the room, which leads into Miss Griffin's dressing-room.

In a moment the detective's hand rests upon the old man's shoulder, and he is dragged forward of light.

"Ah, I think we have three or four little accounts to settle up—haven't we, my friend?" demands the detective grimly, as he looks the semi-intoxicated James Hogg full in the face.

"Let me go—it's a trap—he set me on to do it—he made a fool of me," gasps the old man, who seems suddenly sobered by the seriousness of his position.

"Indeed! This grows interesting. And where is 'he'?" asks the detective.

"There he is—the curse of my life—'Gentleman Jim,'" quavers James Hogg, pointing to where certain, a few moments since, stood the Hon. Alexander Callaghan.

"Hold him—don't let him escape!" cries the detective, darting towards the door which leads to Miss Griffin's dressing-room. It is bolted on the other side. In a moment, however, the officer disappears through the other doorway and runs along the passage.

"Sold again!" he explains ruefully a few moments later, as he rejoins them. "That 'Gentleman Jim' is as slippery as an eel—has the nine lives of a cat and the climbing powers of a monkey. He has gone through the window and down by the roof underneath—smelled the police on the stairs, I suppose."

"I wish you wouldn't always catch the wrong man," whimpers James Hogg.

"Better you than nobody, answers the detective cheerfully. "Besides, you may be able to give us some useful information about that clever nephew of yours."

"I may thank him for this," returns the old man wrathfully. "Only my help once more, he said, to win him a rich wife, and, as soon as ever we had the tin, we were going right out of England, which is getting too hot for him—and now here I am again, left in the lurch, and—"

"Hold your tongue!" says the detective sharply, a whispered word from Tom having reminded him of the case in hand. "And now just listen to me, if you are sober enough to understand. I have—referring to a bulky pocket-book—three charges against you already—burglary with violence at Notting Hill."

"Jim did the violence and took the swag, too," mumbles Mr. Hogg dolefully.

"Suspicious pawing of lady's watch one day last month," pursues the officer, paying no heed to the interruption.

"That was yours, old lady," explains the bleary-eyed old man, nodding his head at Miss Griffin—"the one Jim fished from you down at the Crystal Palace. Here is the ticket if you want your ticker"—producing a dirty piece of pasteboard from his wastecost-pocket and flinging it at her—"it is only in for one pound five—'cause they said the works was made in the year one—about the same date as yourself, ma'am."

The third charge is the most serious. Diamond robbery from a jeweller's clerk, last Monday—the stones valued at three thousand."

"I say—that wasn't me," declares the old man stoutly. "That was Jim, and I never seed a farthing of the money—no, I didn't."

"You'll have to prove it," observes the officer grimly. "I think I can do that," declares Miss Griffin, who, although terribly upset by the scenes, retains her sense of justice. "Mr. Callaghan showed me a splendid set of diamonds—he said they were the family jewels."

The officer indulges in a short laugh.

"The only family jewel he possesses stands before you in the shape of an uncle," he says, pointing at James Hogg, who looks extremely dejected. Then, turning to the delinquent, he continues sternly, "Now, unless you want to be charged with extorting money under false pretences, just acknowledge that you have no claim whatever on the young lady yonder."

"Well, no, I haven't," admits James Hogg reluctantly. "Seeing as Jim's game is up, I suppose I may as well admit it—also seeing as the old gal there has spoken in my favour about the diamonds. No, I never was married as I remember—and don't want to be. I—"

"That's enough," interposes the detective sharply. "I am sure these ladies must be more than tired of you. Now then, come along."

"Where's my 'at? I can't go without my 'at," whimpers the old man miserably.

Judy darts under the table and recovers the missing article.

"Here it is," she says, presenting it to him, with a look of infinite pity. "And, oh, do try to lead a better life when you come out of—of—the place you are going to! If you write to this address"—handing him an envelope—"we will help you—won't we, auntie?"

James Hogg looks for a moment into the girl's frank, pitying eyes, then he says, with a wretched attempt at gaiety—

"I am too old to mend my ways, Polly. But you mean well and I am glad after all, you didn't marry Jim. Oh, he's a bad un, is Jim! As to the help when I comes out, I won't forget. Only be very particular how you send it, or sure as nuts is nuts, young Jim will get it. You see, unfortunately, they called him after me, and we both bear the same name."

Then the wretched man is hustled out of the room, and handed over to the policemen waiting on the stairs.

"Oh, Judy, what an escape, my child!" cries Mrs. Griffin tremblingly. "He quite took me in, with his gentlemanly manner, his flowers, and his careless way of handling money. I really took him for a member of the aristocracy."

"He has dozens of names and is one of the best actors I ever came across," says the detective, smiling. "The way he eludes us is simply mystifying. We knew him for one of the most accomplished thieves in London, and yet, so cleverly does he manage, we can never bring the charges home to him. He can never be caught with the missing property on his person. Have you lost anything besides your watch?"

"Indeed I have—several things," answers Miss Griffin ruefully.

"I am afraid there is little chance of their recovery, beyond the watch. But I must waste no more time—those diamonds are on my mind."

And, amidst many expressions of gratitude on all sides, the detective bows, and takes his departure.

"Oh, Judy, Judy, it is stranger than a dream!" murmurs Miss Griffin. "I can't realize it, you know, even yet. So courteous and kind and considerate as he always seemed and the manners of a gentleman! I suppose it is rather wrong of me—I know it is—but Judy I do hope they won't catch him."

"Oh, auntie, auntie, you would never do for a judge!" says Judy, smiling feebly. "I am afraid I shouldn't either," she continues, slowly shaking her head. "I should certainly let off that poor old man."

"I must own that I can't quite understand your feelings of pity," remarks Tom, who is regarding them with a smile of wonderment. "A couple of downright rascals and here you are, both of you, nearly weeping over their fate."

"All the same, Tom, I am deeply obliged to you for setting things straight," says Judy, glancing up at him with a grateful smile.

"Oh, I didn't do much—not anything particular, I mean!" returns Tom awkwardly.

"Yes, you did," persists Judy. "You cleared matters up. If you had not chanced to come to London when you did, I should have been on my way to Mizzy Court now, with that wicked old man."

"Not you!" retorts Tom, who is shy of taking any praise in the matter to himself. "Of course, you would have found him out somehow."

"Oh, Tom, I am so tired of London! Let us go back to the Hermitage at once!" cries Miss Griffin, who feels that she cannot leave behind her the scene of her late discomfort.

So it is arranged, to everybody's satisfaction, particularly that of Mrs. Hogg, on the morning of their departure, and Judy, in her final squabble with her late landlady, as she walks from the street door to the taxi.

CHAPTER VII

Two months have gone since Miss Griffin and Judy left London. Two months only, yet they have brought worry, excitement and trouble enough to the quiet fold at the Hermitage.

For one brief fortnight after their return, peace, joy, and general content reigned in that country household. They could afford to laugh now at their recent scare and, although Miss Griffin fully realized the fact that the laugh told rather against herself, still she none the less happily joined in it. During that happy fortnight Judy and her guardians felt that they could not laugh long enough or loud enough at her late escape. Then suddenly, in the midst of their light-heartedness, there comes, one morning, a fateful letter from across the sea, which puts an end to all their mirth and sends them about their daily business feeling vaguely uncomfortable and sad. The contents of that letter fall heaviest upon Judy because she ought to rejoice at the news, and yet she cannot.

"Here it is," she says, presenting it to him, with a look of infinite pity. "And, oh, do try to lead a better life when you come out of—of—the place you are going to! If you write to this address"—handing him an envelope—"we will help you—won't we, auntie?"

James Hogg looks for a moment into the girl's frank, pitying eyes, then he says, with a wretched attempt at gaiety—

"I am too old to mend my ways, Polly. But you mean well and I am glad after all, you didn't marry Jim. Oh, he's a bad un, is Jim! As to the help when I comes out, I won't forget. ORANGE PEKOE BLEND "SALADA" TEA

A hot indignant flush rises to the girl's cheeks.

"Yes, I can," she says shortly. "Only, I was not paying the slightest attention to the book. I was thinking of something else."

"And of what, pray, if I may be allowed to ask?" sneers Mrs. Earnshaw.

"Of—the terrible parting that is in store for me," answers Judy, unexpectedly bursting into a wild fit of weeping.

"Oh, spare me your heroics, Julia, and do try to gain some command over your feelings!" says Mrs. Earnshaw coldly. "I really think you do it sometimes merely to annoy me. You know, you can't possibly regret leaving two old imbeciles like Sarah and her brother! The life they lead in this out-of-the-world district is simply stupefying in its monotony."

"Think of all they have done for me!" sobs Judy.

"Fed and clothed you out of their plenty," sneers Mrs. Earnshaw. "Brought you up with no more education than a milkmaid."

"It was my own fault," protests Judy. "I hated French and German, and I wouldn't learn. And, mother, I can play."

"Oh, yes, you can play," admits Mrs. Earnshaw placidly, "and you can read—I dare say you can write also, and add two and two together—any servant-girl can do as much, with the exception of the music, and that is simply a natural gift—you inherit it from me!"

"I know I am not clever," Judy owns despondently. "And, mother, since I shan't be any credit to you, I wish you would let me go on living, with auntie and Guardie—they don't mind my being stupid."

"I never said you were stupid, child," corrects Mrs. Earnshaw languidly. "I was merely pointing out how shamefully these people have neglected you. As for leaving you with them, the idea is absurd. Of course I shall wait myself as a companion. Besides, your father has—very unfairly, I consider—left the bulk of his property to you, and, unless you live with me, I really shall not have sufficient to keep up a decent establishment. I have only a beggarly five hundred a year of my own."

"Oh, mother, then you don't want me for myself," says the girl in a low tone of pain—"you want the money!"

Miss Earnshaw laughs—a heartless mocking laugh it sounds to her unhappy little daughter.

"My dear child, pray don't go in for sentiment—it is such bad form," she returns scornfully. "Surely even you must have more common sense than to imagine I should want you simply for the pleasure of your company! However, I dare say we shall get on together very well, but you mustn't be always bothering me about loving you and all that sort of thing."

"Oh mother," cries Judy, a lump rising in her throat, "take my money—I don't want it. Leave me, oh, do please leave me with auntie and Guardie, who care for me!"

"There you go again, Judy," sighs Mrs. Earnshaw, raising her arched eyebrows protestingly, "as if I didn't care for you. Of course I care. You will be surrounded by every comfort and luxury, I shall take you into society and try to make you happy, only you must not be demonstrative—I don't like it."

"Very well, mother, I won't offend again," says Judy, striving to hide her misery. "I will reserve my love for auntie and Guardie—and—"

"Oh, stop—do, Judy!" exclaims Mrs. Earnshaw, with an affected laugh.

"Stop—why?" asks Judy sternly. "I really thought you were going to include that most rustic of youths, Tom Wilde in the list of your loved ones."

For a moment Judy flushes crimson, and then she turns very pale with suppressed emotion.

"Tom Wilde may be rustic, but he saved me from worse than death," she says in a low voice.

"Pray don't repeat all that absurd stuff! I am weary of it," returns Mrs. Earnshaw impatiently. "As I said just now, Sarah is an imbecile, but really, to credit such a tale as that she must have been insane."

For some minutes there is silence in the room then Judy, rising from her chair, says coldly—

"I think I will go out into the grounds for a little while."

"Give me the book first," demands Mrs. Earnshaw, holding out her hand for the volume. "And, Julia, while you are out see if you can find me a few ripe peaches. I have had only two this morning."

Judy does not, however, make her way straight to the kitchen garden, but, seeking out a secluded seat in the shrubbery, sinks down upon it with her head in a whirl. Why is her mother so unloving and cold? Why must she leave the shelter of her much-loved home, to go out into an unfriendly world? Oh, it is hard and cruel on her, and above all, on those who have lavished their love on her for years!

In her misery, she rocks herself to and fro on the seat, as if in bodily pain, and finally bursts into a paroxysm of tears.

"What is the matter, Judy?" asks Tom's voice suddenly, in a tone of most tender anxiety.

"I don't know," answers Judy, untruthfully. "It all seems so strange, having to leave the Hermitage, and—and—I hate it!"

"Hate what?" asks Tom, seating himself beside her. "The Hermitage?"

"Don't be so stupid, Tom! You know I love every stone in the place—every bit of mortar that binds it together—and—and—it will kill me to leave it."

Tom looks very sympathetic and sighs profoundly.

"Of course it is trying," he says sadly. "But just think of your mother and her love. Naturally, she wants you all to herself at first, after pining for you all these years."

"Pining for me!" echoes Judy with a quaint look of despair. "Oh, Tom, how little you know of her! She doesn't care a straw for me!"

"Come now," says Tom, shaking his head—"how do you make that out, Judy? If she didn't care for you, she'd leave you here, you know."

Judy's heart is full of grievance and Tom's ear is a very sympathetic one into which to pour her troubles. So for two hours these young people sit, plotting and planning, on that seat in the shrubbery. And, as their chatter becomes more and more confidential, Tom draws nearer and nearer to Judy, until her head, with its abundance of curly flaxen hair, is almost resting on his shoulder.

"Now, if you didn't hate me so we could easily arrange matters, you know," remarks Tom, with a deep-drawn sigh.

PAUL IN TARBUS

(International Uniform Sunday School Lesson, October 1)

COLDEN TEXT: "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Timothy 2: 15.

LESSON PASSAGE: Acts 21: 39; 22: 3, 27, 28; 25: 4-7; Philippians 3: 2-5.

"Lord, at Thy word opens you door, inviting

Teacher and taught to feast this hour with Thee:

Opens a book where God in human writing

Thinks His deep thoughts, and dead tongues live for me."

PAUL'S HOME, Acts 21: 39

There is a saying that the city makes the man. At least it has a large part in making or unmaking a man. Paul was fortunate in his birthplace. Tarsus was a great commercial city which had attracted many Jewish traders. It was a border city and a seaport with many people coming and going. It had a very famous university which produced distinguished scholars. Greek art and culture flourished. Some of Paul's knowledge of boxing and racing was doubtless gained there. It may be that Paul's love of travel and adventure may be traced to his visits among the docks, watching the ships come in, and talking to sailors from many lands. His knowledge of the Greek language was to be invaluable to him in his wide missionary travels.

PAUL'S EDUCATION, Acts 22: 3

Having finished his education in the schools of Tarsus, Paul was sent to Jerusalem to study under the great teacher Gamaliel. In this school he was taught Pharisaic law, and his mind was imbued with the ideals of his race. Gamaliel's influence lived long in the career of Paul. Paul was proud to have been a pupil of Gamaliel, a man of tolerance and keen intellectual insight. In the course of time the pupil became more notable than the teacher. Such is the common fact in education. A teacher may be little known, and yet indirectly through his pupils be doing a greater work than is ever seen. There are few positions of trust to equal that of a day school or Sunday School teacher to whom parents send their children for instruction and example.

PAUL'S CITIZENSHIP, Acts 22: 27, 28

Paul's own experience fitted him to be a great internationalist. He was of Jewish blood, educated in a Greek city, holding citizenship in the Roman empire. His Roman citizenship had not been purchased, but had come to him as a gift of birth. Probably his father had been wealthy enough to purchase this right, or it had been granted to him for some service to the Roman empire. Though it must have meant mental conflict to Paul that his own land was subject to the Roman power, his divided allegiance did not rob him of respect for Roman law. Again and again he owed his protection to his Roman citizenship. We can hardly overestimate the mental stimulation that Paul received from his contacts with Greek culture, Roman Law and Jewish faith. The contrasts were striking and prepared Paul's thinking for the day when he could say that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Gentile.

PAUL'S FIRST FAITH, Acts 23: 4-7

It is an indication of the sincerity of the Jewish people that they kept up their religious rites when absent from their native land. Jewish residents in Gentile cities had their synagogues. In Tarsus Paul received Jewish teaching in his home and in the the synagogue according to the strictest demands of Pharisaism. He gloried in the history of Israel and sought to be true to the religion of his fathers. There was great gain in the mental and moral discipline of this Pharisaic training. Paul knew the text of Old Testament scriptures and the history of his nation. The Messianic hope of Psalms and prophets fitted him to understand the mission of Jesus. It was in the light of the Old Testament that Paul interpreted Christianity both to Jew and to Gentile.

PAUL'S FINAL FAITH, Philippians 3: 2-6

Family pride, racial tradition, Pharisaic education, all combined to make Paul very intense in his Jewish faith. How strong must have been the appeal of Christ to make him break with his relatives and compatriots! His Jewish name was that of the first King, Saul, also of the tribe of Benjamin. His devotion to his faith had been proved by his willingness to persecute the Christians. Yet we find Paul asserting that the Christians are the true church because they worship God in the spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus and have no confidence in the flesh. To Paul Christ was all in all. Nothing else had permanent spiritual value. For this faith Paul was ready to live, and at the end he died for his faith. As student and teacher, as leader and missionary, as writer and saint, Paul showed himself approved unto God, a workman not needing to be ashamed.

CANADIAN YOUTH

Canadians enjoy many advantages in preparation for world citizenship. There are two great sections of Canada with different motherlands. Several dozen other nationalities are represented in the population of the Dominion. Frequent contacts with the United States enlarge our outlook. Membership in the British Empire and in the League of Nations makes us conscious of other continents. On their journeys between East and West many travelers pass through Canada and many tourists come for the summer and winter seasons. Each year a large number of Canadian students go abroad for study. Canadian churches are in touch with other Christian churches throughout the world and Canadian missionaries are at work in a dozen different lands. These facts help us to understand that in Christ there are no national or racial boundaries.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Which has the greater influence upon character, family or community?
2. How does the British Empire differ from the Roman Empire?
3. What did Paul's Judaism contribute to his Christianity?
4. Had the Pharisees any merits to offset their defects?
5. How did Jewish, Greek and Roman influences contribute to the making of Paul?

SOIL EXHAUSTION

A 25-bushel crop of wheat (grain) removes from the soil about 30 pounds of nitrogen, 12 pounds of phosphoric acid and 7 pounds of potash. A 200-bushel crop of potatoes (tubers) removes about 42 pounds of nitrogen, 118 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 60 pounds of potash. If the mean of these figures for wheat and potatoes is taken and it is assumed that the average amounts represent the normal draft made by the growth of crops on the three plant food substances (nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash) it may be estimated that cropping results in an annual loss to the soil of 36 pounds of nitrogen, 13 pounds of phosphoric acid and 33 pounds of potash.—Dominion Dep't. of Agriculture bulletin on Manures and Fertilizers, Their Nature, Functions and Application.

DON'T FORCE YOUR EYES

What do we mean? It is possible to force clear eyesight from defective eyes. When we do this our eyes are burning up two or three times more nerve energy than they have a right to! When we strain our eyes other organs of the body have to suffer. That's why eyestrain is often felt, not in eyes, but almost anywhere else—in such symptoms as headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, excessive irritability, and brain fog.

Don't let the fact that you seem to have good eyesight fool you in thinking your eyes are right. Have them examined and make sure.

ARCHDEACON SCOTT SPEAKS AT T.C.S.

War Padre Prepared For Prison Sentence In Fight For Reform

If Archdeacon F. G. Scott, of Quebec, poet and wartime padre, had followed first plans to preach at Kingston on Sunday he would have preached on tomatoes and not prison reform and the need of a royal commission to investigate Canada's treatment of prisoners.

"I was just going to preach on tomatoes," he smiled, when shown a report that strong pressure had been brought to bear to prevent his preaching at a Kingston church on penitentiary administration by Bishop J. Lyons of Kingston.

"I won't make any comment," was the archdeacon's final decision, "except to deny that I was forbidden to preach at Kingston. I had been asked to preach at the harvest festival service only."

Instead of taking the service at Kingston, as was first arranged, Archdeacon Scott did not leave the train, but continued to Port Hope to address the boys of Trinity School, where his grandson is a pupil and the principal is a close friend.

The Archdeacon reiterated his determination to continue the fight for a royal commission to investigate Canada's prison administration, "even if I have to go to Kingston myself," he stated.

"In Canada we are far behind English, French and United States methods," he added. "We need a royal commission composed of men of outstanding character and independence who will go into the whole question of prison reform in Canada. On that board we should have at least one criminologist from England and another from France. They should be chosen with the same care with which Hon. R. B. Bennett chose the members of the banking commission."

Archdeacon Scott explained: "On all hands I have met people who are opposing in one way or another the appointing of such a royal commission on prisons on the ground that the agitation might embarrass the government. For myself, I think this spirit is too contemptible. It means the setting up of party affiliations above the sense of duty to our citizens. As long as that spirit prevails in Canada on any one political side we shall never advance very far with our civilization."

"We should now recognize the fact that the penitentiary should be looked upon as one of the most important educational features in the land and the head of that institution should be chosen for his knowledge of dealing with criminals with the same care with which we should choose the head of a university or a public school for his ability in his own line of education. I am not a sentimentalist and know that punishment must be meted out both as a deterrent to the criminal and as a means of reformation. But the worst criminal must be made to feel that in the midst of prison life he is getting a square deal. In the case of these men the school, church, home and all other means of education have failed. Their last chance is the penitentiary."

"I don't know whether all that these men said at the present Kingston trials is true, but as the public of Canada is responsible for the treatment of these prisoners, they have a right to know how that responsibility is being discharged," Archdeacon Scott maintained. "In these days there have been developed in many countries new methods of dealing with criminals far more effective than the old repressive ones and Canada is far behind in some of her institutions."

"They have done a little window dressing since the riots," in Archdeacon Scott's opinion, "but the essential system has not changed. The eighteen improvements which Gen.

Ormond boasts of were the results of the riots and were not introduced by an understanding administration in the government office itself. If it is necessary to wait for riots in our penitentiaries before we can hope to improve the methods tending to the reformation of criminals, the people of Canada who are ultimately responsible are certainly in a deplorable situation.

Crime Increasing

"Crime is increasing in Canada probably owing to the depression and to the dishonesty prevailing in many of the big departments of public life, not excepting governments. It is increasing at an alarming rate, and the most alarming feature in this connection is the youth of the criminal. It has been stated in public in Toronto that the average of convicts in our penitentiaries was twenty years. If these men are not reformed in their prison life they will be sent back at the end of their terms to become a further and greater menace to society than when they were convicted. All Canadians must rise together to meet this emergency."

Wedding Bells

A pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Boundy, Cobourg Road, when their only daughter, Ethel Fanny, was united in marriage to Mr. Walter Edmund Williamson, son of Mr. Williamson of Peterboro. The bride was given away by her father and was dressed in Masseline silk of pale green trimmed with Irish point lace.

For Sprains and Bruises.—There is nothing better for sprains and contusions than Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It will reduce the swelling that follows a sprain, will cool the inflamed flesh and draw the pain. It will take the ache out of a bruise by counteracting the inflammation. A trial will convince any who doubt its power.

There is nothing repulsive in Miller's Worm Powders, and they are as pleasant to take as sugar, so that few children will refuse them. In some cases they cause vomiting through their action in an unsoiled stomach, but this is only a manifestation of their cleansing power, no indication that they are hurtful. They can be thoroughly depended upon to clear all worms from the system.

IN MEMORIAM

ROWSON—In loving memory of my dear sister, Mrs. F. C. Rowson, who passed away September 23rd, 1932.

A silent thought, a secret tear, Keeps her memory ever dear. Time takes away the edge of grief But memory turns back every leaf. Sadly missed, HILLIARD.

ROWSON—In loving memory of our dear Aunt, Mrs. F. C. Rowson, who passed away September 23, 1932.

Just a thought of sweet remembrance, Just a memory fond and true, Just a token of affection And a heartache still for you. More and more each day we miss you, Though our thoughts are not revealed, Little do they know the sorrow, That is within our hearts concealed. Sadly missed by GLADYS and STAN.
